TO PARIS FOR $250.

How to Make This Sum Suffice in Paying the Cost of a Trip to the Great Exposition.

Mary Peckham Sleicher in Leslie's Weekly.

Making the initial expense the cost of a trip across the Atlantic, one begins with the steamer passage. There is such a thing as a very excellent second-class ticket, with good rooms and really abundant fare. Many persons in comfortable circumstances habitually travel second-class on our great steamship lines, and save just about half the expense of the ocean journey. A first-class round trip ticket costs $150 and upward, and the Canadian lines and some of our slow boats will make a rate of a little less. This means the lowest first-class rate on a good boat. The route to Paris from Southampton or from London is direct, and it is easy to arrange to buy your railroad ticket at a tourist agency in any of our great cities, if one does not speak French and does not care to be both-ered with the purchase of tickets on reaching England or France. Some will take you to Paris from New York and home again and pay your steamer You can secure excellent lodgings and three meals a day at thousands of French boarding-houses, which are known as pensions, where your expenses need not exceed a dollar a day. A number of well-bred American girls, studying French in this city, and living two in a room, with excellent quarters and as good a dining service as any one need ask for, pay at the rate of 135 francs per month, which is twenty-seven dollars, and for this per gross ton for coal mined. Twenty they receive the use of their room from Wilkes-Barre, Nanticoke their coffee and bread and butter in the morning, a substantial mid-day meal or dejenuer, and an evening dinner lasting over an hour and comprising several courses. They pay extra for lights, fuel, and washing, but this is not much. Many economize by smaller garments, but the expense o the laundry is no higner than it is at home. These boarding-places, or pensions, can be found in nearly every section of the city, and especially in the Latin Quarter. A list of pensions will be gladly given you at the Brooklyn Eagle office, 53 Rue Cambon; the Lady Guide office, 24 Rue Richelleu, near the Louvre; or at the office of the New York State Commission at the disorderly houses, the first shot being

COST OF A CAB.

From your rallroad station on your arrival at Parls to your boarding house, you will have to pay for the use of a cab. By the hour, a cab for one or more persons costs two and one half francs, or fifty cents. By the trip, or "tour," it costs one and one-hall francs, or thirty cents, besides a tip of five or ten cents for the coachman. It will be seen that cab hire is as cheap admission tickets to the exposition vares. No tickets are sold at the entrances. All must be bought of the venders outside, and if one is willing first offered, he will be able to get a ticket for fifty-five centimes, or eleven all widths. cents, but as soon as one of these icket-sellers sees a foreigner he begins to offer the tickets for seventy-five centimes, so one must literally beat the seller down. Before ten in the by any other means, the landlords morning and after six at night the admission requires the use of two John O'Brien, of North Scranton, who was arrested Monday, charged with not have mounted up much beyond the cost of your steamship ticket and steamer tips, and if you are prepared, after having seen the exposition, to return home after two weeks' stay in Paris, you will find that $250 will cover the entire expense. But a /visitor would be unjust to himself or herself to limit a trip to Paris to a single week ckets, and some days four or five.

for twenty-five dollars. The fare, including fees from Paris is less than ten dollars, if you go via Dieppe. The short Calais route is more expensive. At the Girls' Friendly Society or the Young Woman's Christian association, in London, girls can readily procure board and lodgings for five dollars a week, not including the mid-day meat. The former society has an office in Paris, where application may be made extending across the street. He was for lodging in London, and everything but nevertheless drove over, at which Patrolman Day jumped into the wagon arranged before the start is made from Paris. This will leave ten dollars for your extras in London, which will be ample for 'bus fares, as most of the museums and places of interest are open to he public in London as in Paris. One may see a good deal in a week and still spend very little She had entered a cab and ordered the

ONE WEEK IN PARIS.

An etra week's stay in Paris, including an occasional cab hire and more than an occasional 'bus-fare, need not more than double your allowance while here, for twenty-five dollars will be ample to cover it all. Of course if you visit the theatres and other places of entertainment, your expenditures will be larger, but if you do not care for amusement, and avoid the temptation to purchase the goods so temptingly displayed in all the stores, large and small, and especially in the charming little shops along the Rue de Rivoll, you will not need to expend more than $250 for your entire trip. including a week at the exposition and a week in and about Paris. means strict economy, and with still stricter economy and second-class steamer fare you can eliminate fully fifty dollars from this total, making it only $200. This can be done, and has been done, and one has not to go hungry or put himself or nerself to any serious discomfort.

The summary of her expenses that one of the young ladies gave to meand she was a bright, wide-awake American girl, whose father's checkbook was always at her disposal, and it was not a thin one-was as follows:

eatner, car, and fees, New York to Paris 6 00 One week sight-seeing in Paris, including trips to Versailles and Fontainebleau ... 25 00 Week's trip to London ...... 25 co

This young lady had finished her brief visit to London, had met all her expenses, and had her return ticket to New York, with a surplus on hand estimated to be sufficient to pay the steamer tips and incidental expenses on the homeward trip. A part of her account was therefore an estimate; but as she had kept track of her expenditures on the steamer coming over, she me was approximately accurate. Bear in mind, too, that I have put the steamer passage at a pretty good figure. If one travels second-class, seventy dollars may be at once deducted from this item, and there are lines with boats that have been selling (I don't know how the rates stand now) excursion tickets, first-class, both ways, for from $125 to $150.

Two persons will find a trip to Baris less expensive proportionately than one, for two can make the trip, including two weeks in Paris and one in Lon-don, with all expenses covered, for $400, provided they are satisfied to live in boarding-houses or pensions, to walk or take a 'bus in preference to a cab, and to refrain from attending ex pensive amusements or from making unnecessary purchases. I know this can be done, because I have met youn ladies in the city whose expenditures have been based on the expectation of spending even less than the amount have named, and they tell me they have had no difficulty in making both ends meet; in fact, they have found that they could allow themselves some extravagances which they had not anticipated. Other young ladies have told me that it was preposterous to expect to catch a glimpse of London and Paris steam lines will book you through to at any such figure as I have given, Paris at a reasonable rate. But $175 but these persons usually live at hotels, where their daily expenses average fully five dollars, and they think it necessary to spend from two to four dollars per day for theatre or opera tickets, or other amusements, so that their average expenditure on what they term an economical basis foots up ten
