HORSE AND CARRIAGE MYS-TERIOUSLY SPIRITED AWAY.

Was Left Standing in Front of the Arlington Hotel on Monday Night by a Stranger and Two Other Strangers Disappeared with It Emil Bonn, Republican Candidate for Recorder of Deeds, Serenaded by the Lawrence Band-Good Condition of Streets in Eleventh Ward.

On Monday night, about 8.30 o'clock, a stranger in a light running carriage, drawn by a light brown horse. drove up to the Arlington hotel and tied his horse to an electric light pole at the corner of Fig street and Cedar avenue, and entered the hotel. No ooner had he entered the hotel when two men came up Fig street, unhitched the horse and drove away.

Immediately after the man came out of the hotel, only to find his horse gone. Thinking at first that some one was playing a joke on him he crossed the street and accosted John McHugh who lives close by, and asked him if he had seen anyone enter the carriage and drive away, Mr. McHugh then told of the two men he saw coming up Fig street and driving away with the horse.

The man, who was a stranger in the community, followed in the direction the men took when driving away, and up until midnight was still look-ing for the outfit. Whether some one playing a joke on the man, or the horse was stolen, could not be ascertained, as the man was unknown in that vicinity and has not been seen since.

GENUINE GRATITUDE.

A Judge's Story of How an Old-Time Client Kept His Word.

From the St. Louis Globe-Democrat

"Bob Ingersoll once said, "Gratitude is the fairest flower that sheds its perfume o'er the garden of the heart,' or something like that." remarked Judge Edwin R. McKee, of the First district of Missouri to a small gathering of barristers in a hotel office at Macon, Mo., recently, when he was holding a special term to try some cases for Judge Shelton. The lawyers tilted their chairs against the wall and waited for what was to follow "I've thought of that several times in connection with an incident of the days when I was practicing and looking eagerly for clients," Judge McKee "The start of the story was went on. about fifteen years ago, and it was in my home town, Memphis. A fellow called on me one day and introduced

Well his trivial affair was that he had been arrested for stealing a drove of fine cattle from a well-to-do farmer out in the country a ways. He began his narrative by telling he had been overhauled by the sheriff while driving the cattle along the highway, but he said he had bought them from three men, whose names he as Smith, Jones and Brown! gave Lord! I nearly fell off the chair. What jury on earth would swallow that comblnation? I gently suggested that to him, but he declared those were the identical names the men had given him, and that he was telling the truth. He said the day the cattle were said to have been stolen he was in the northeastern part of the state, but at the first trial we were unable to get anybody there to prove the alibi. I think the case was tried four times altogether. There were several mistrials, a conviction, and then the case was reversed. I became pretty badly worked up over the matter and ne-glected lots of good business to see the kept objecting, but the court overruled fight through. I had doubts about my me, and I knew the defense had thrown man at first, but he was always so candid, hopeful and energetic that I began to like him, and was as anxious for the defendant. to hoist him out of the hole as he was to get out. Before going into the last trial I questioned him closer about the alibi matter, and we decided to take a trip over to the little town where he from that distance. I led the witnesses said he was stopping the day the cat-he ate dinner remembered distinctly of his being there, but, to save her life, she could not fix the date. During a pause in our talk one of the children, who was drawing pictures on a slate over in the corner, looked up languidly and said:

"'Maw, didn't you go over to Missu Hobbses that night?' "The lady said she did, and casually emarked that Mrs. Hobbs had been ill that night, but that didn't help the date matter any. Having nothing better to say, I inquired what had been the matter with Mrs. Hobbs. She redlened a bit, and said a brand new little Hobbs had been ushered into the world on that occasion. I grabbed for my hat, and told her to point out the Hobbs mansion. In less than three minutes afterward I was copying from the old family Bible the entry: 'George Washington Jefferson Hobbs, born January -, 1884.' We had Mrs. Hobbs and her family Bible on hand, together with the lady who had fed my client that day, and the state couldn't beat the combination. "After the jury had acquitted Ensign he rushed up to me and hugged me like a long lost brother. When he left town some days afterward he called on me and at parting said: 'If you ever want me for anything, Mac, just say, "Come," and you won't have to explain."

"Ensign went to Nebraska, got into business, and was soon a prominent and influential citizen. He drifted into politics and got to be postmaster of his town. I heard from him occasionally, and then he dropped out of my mind until-well, this is the other end of the story. Some years later I took a breach of promise case for a young lady. The defendant had plenty of money and friends, but a full investigation of the case showed he had treated the plaintiff most cruelly. I felt the circumstances justified suing for $25,000, and filed our petition for that sum. The young lady plaintiff was modest, and of an extremely retiring disposition. 1 don't believe she would have faced the ordeal of a trial if her friends hadn't felt she had been badly treated and insisted on her demanding redress. We got our evidence in in fine shape and made a convincing case, but during the defendant's testimony they began attacking my client's character by inti-Knowing she had left the mation. country they sought by innuendo to mix her up with Ensign, with whom she had some sort of a business transaction at one time. He answered every question promptly and convincingly and completely refuted the slanderous imputations thrown at my client. He not only denied any intimacy with the plaintiff, at the times and places suggested, but cited facts to show the idea was preposterous. If he had been coached by an expert all day, he couldn't have made a better witness. He was put through a savage cross-examination, but never lost his cool, easy demanor, and came out of it stronger than he went in. We got a verdict for $9,000, and Ensign was the happiest man in the court oom when the verdict was announced. "He told me his train was late at the

He would have been here twelve hours earlier, but he was out in the country when the message came, and he missed the train at the starting point.
