CARBONDALE.

CYCLE CLUB'S LOSS.

Tuesday the Cycle club will lose two members with whom it can ill afford to part, George Van Gilder and Ike Hollenbeck. The former will return to Port Jervis, where he will be identified with is father in a manufacturing enterprise, and the latter will go to New York city to undergo a course of training in nursing. During his residence here of about three years Mr. Van Gilder has been a member of the organization, having held several of its prominent offices. He will be greatly missed from its social circles and its business councils. Mr. Hollenbeck beside being a social idol is a musician of extraordinary ability. He is one of the best ear-players of the piano in the Lackawanna valley and, unlike those who catch the melody and "fake" the accompaniment, he embraces the full harmony of all the negro melodies, popular dance and operatic music, even mastering many complications of the classic. There is a smoothness and delicacy to his scale work and a precision in chord passages seldom possessed by other than trained professional. The hours upon hours of entertainment he has afforded the club will be, in the delight of memory, second only to the charm of his personality. Tonight the club will give a "smoker" in honor of the departing members. There will be an entertainment and light refreshments will be served. The committee has arranged to serve the entire membership of more than one hundred.

The High School foot ball team were defeated in their game Saturday against the Carbondale Commercial Institute. They, nevertheless, put up a great game and were defeated mainly because their opponents were far heavier men. The victors won by a score of 5 points to 0.

William Mellow, who has been in Dr. Wheeler's hospital, Carbondale, for several weeks, does not make much progress towards recovery and is still in a very weak condition.

The Philadelphia record of yesterday contained the following dispatch from Little Falls, N. Y., which will doubtless be of interest to Jermyn readers:

"Pretty Bertha Small has been missing since Tuesday, and her father, Robert Small, a wealthy farmer, has kept the police busy trying to find her. Today he received this message from her, dated at a Pennsylvania town: 'Papa, I'm married to John, the hired man.' Bertha is 22 years old and the beauty of the neighborhood. She had an excellent education and had enjoyed many social advantages. She has had many suitors, but she often laughingly told her father that she would never marry and leave him. Last summer he engaged a new farm hand, John Pizer, who had been formerly employed as a hostler in a Little Falls livery stable. He saw Miss Small frequently, as he was a member of the household, but her parents had no knowledge of even a friendship between the two."

Mme. Patti's boudoir at Craig-y-Nos is quite gayly decorated with the ribbons taken from the bouquets which have been thrown to her.

THE LONE FISHERMAN.

The World's Single Sportsman Who Catches Fish with Trained Birds.

From the London Mail.

There are quite a number of fascinating sports, says Le Sport Universal Illustre of Paris, which are entirely neglected because it is assumed that their practice is difficult from the fact that their exponents are few.

For instance, in France there are not more than half a dozen sportsmen who practice hawking, though the training of the goshawk and the sparrowhawk to catch rabbits, hares, partridges and pheasants is an easy and inexpensive pastime.

It is the same with cormorant fishing, the subject of the present article. Thought practiced twenty years ago with considerable success by two or three sportsmen, it is now confined to M. Felix Bourguignon and two cormorants belonging to the Jardin d'Acclimatation, Paris. It is claimed that M. Bourguignon is the only man in the world who regularly follows cormorant fishing as a sport.

These two birds are now expert fishers, and our contemporary thus describes the process of training adopted by M. Bourguignon:

"First of all, the long feathers of the left wing are cut to prevent the untrained birds lacerating the face of the trainer. Then to each foot is attached a leather thong, by means of which the bird can be conveniently held without risk. For two or three days each bird is carefully fed by hand at regular intervals, and at the end of this time complete docility is obtained, and the birds, having become accustomed to their master, follow him about like a couple of affectionate poodles.

"This attained, the actual fishing is commenced. A number of live fish are placed in a tank, and the cormorant, having had a collar adjusted to his neck sufficiently tight to prevent him swallowing the fish, is allowed to plunge for his prey. In a few seconds he reappears with a fish partly swallowed. He is then easily persuaded to perch upon his master's finger, and placed on the ground, it is an easy matter to oblige him to disgorge his catch, which is immediately put out of sight, the cormorant being rewarded by a small piece of fish or other suitable food.

"The sport, according to an eye witness, is of a most interesting, and even fascinating character, especially if the cormorant pits himself against a good sized fish. Some most exciting struggles are witnessed, and the movements and manoeuvres of the cormorant are of marvelous rapidity and grace."

Cormorant fishing is largely practiced in China and Japan as a business. In these countries it is generally carried out at night time, and in boats. Each fisherman takes, as a rule, five cormorants, and to the prow of the boat is attached a brilliant light, which attracts the fish, of which enormous numbers are caught by the birds.

These Chinese and Japanese fishermen attain very great skill in the manipulation of the birds. Nothing is more surprising than to see the way in which they will handle four or five cormorants, all retained by strings, and send them into the water at the same time.

The juggle with the strings—which are held between the fingers of the left hand—while the birds plunge in all directions, is a matter requiring the greatest dexterity.

RAIN MEASURING MACHINES.

From the London Express.

The British Rainfall association, as it now stands, is the result of half a century's unremitting labor. From something over 100 at the start it has now more than 3,000 reporting stations, which extend over all parts of the British Isles.

At each station is an agent of the association, armed with a rain gauge, making observations to be eventually dispatched to headquarters for embodiment in the annual report. On December 31 of each year printed forms are sent to all the agents, who are supposed to fill them in with the particulars of their observations for the entire twelve months.

But now as to how the rain is measured. It is done by means of a gauge. There are various kinds of gauges, costing from about 12s. 6d. up to several pounds. The "Snowdon" gauge is considered a very trustworthy apparatus.

It consists of a long circular metal—galvanized iron or copper—reservoir, which is fixed into the ground by means of four wooden spiked stakes. It contains a glass bottle and a metal funnel. At the side of it, also fixed into the ground by means of a spiked stake, is a graduation glass, which will register from a hundredth of an inch to half an inch.

The rain is caught in the funnel, which fits flush with the reservoir, and passes into the glass bottle. From this it is poured into the graduation glass and so measured.

At Camden Square (the headquarters of the association) there is a very elaborate and ingenious gauge, which measures and registers automatically. The rain is caught in a funnel and passes into a metal cup, which is connected with an index. As the cup fills, it presses upon the index, which marks a line upon a paper form wound around a cylinder.

When the cup is full it turns over and empties its contents into a larger receptacle and returns to its former position, the index having registered exactly one inch and shifted its position ready to repeat the operation. At the same time a dial on the outside of the gauge also marks the working of the index. The former can be read at night by means of a lantern which is attached at the side. So that the depth of a rainfall may be ascertained at once by merely glancing at the dial fixed to the gauge.

Another remarkably ingenious contrivance to be found at Camden Square, and which took years to perfect, is an elaborate apparatus which will simultaneously measure rain, snow and hail, and register them. It will also register thunder, lightning and the rate of the wind. It gives the duration of thunderclaps and the number of lightning flashes. It is altogether a most wonderful invention.

The average rainfall in a locality is very useful knowledge to a farmer who contemplates purchasing land in a district he is unacquainted with.

AN OPINION ON CUBA.

Rev. Dr. J. A. Milburn, of Indianapolis.

The statesmanship that imposed a promise of Cuban independence upon the American people is one of the most calamitous pieces of statesmanship that we can find in history. The independence of Cuba means revolution. After awhile it means another act of intervention, and, perhaps, another war. Cuba is so related to the United States that she cannot exist as an independent political entity. Cuba must ultimately belong to us, and that she is not ours now is one of the faculties of statesmanship.

May Irwin Tonight.

Tonight, May Irwin will be in Scranton with her new play and her new songs. If there is one woman on the stage whom the local theatergoers are always anxious to see, it is May Irwin. Her engagement this year will mark the introduction of another of her popular entertainments in her production of "A Woman's Way."

It is a new play by Glen MacDonough, the author of "Sister Mary," in which Miss Irwin met with such great success last year. As the central figure in "A Woman's Way," she is said to be doing the most entertaining work of her career. Her new songs, and there are lots of them, are rapidly springing into the widest popularity and will be shortly hummed and whistled everywhere. In her support is included a company containing many names suggestive of artistic value. Among these are Raymond Hitchcock, R. E. Graham, George Beane, Jacques Krueger, Roland Carter, Bert Thayer, Queenie Vassar, Mabel Florence, Jane Burby, Alice Kellar, Sadie Peters, Lillie Collins, Edith Blair, Theo. Carew, Helen Rainsley and others.

"Le Voyage en Suisse."

When the public places the stamp of its approval upon a play the management need not worry over results. A case in point is the Hanlon Brothers' "Le Voyage en Suisse," which has been played on the continent for eighteen years without being placed on the shelf during any season within that time. It is being presented this season in Paris, Berlin, St. Petersburg and London, and the principal cities of Australia, Portugal and Mexico. On the continent it is usually presented under the title of "The Swiss Express." "Le Voyage en Suisse" was first presented in this country at the old Park theater in New York, on Sept. 12, 1881.

The present cast is considered by competent authority to be the best that has even been seen in this country. It embraces Charles Guyer, William and Charles Schrode, Robert Broderick, Fred Strong, Thomas Evans, Edwin Carroll, Raymond Capp, N. M. Herbert, Allene Crater, Nellie Daly, Marion Shirley, Rene Hoffman, Bessie Clayton and an augmented chorus of thirty people. It will be presented at the Lyceum tomorrow night.

"The Princess of Patches."

The Bon Ton Stock company will open a week's engagement at the Academy of Music tonight, presenting "The Princess of Patches" as the opening bill. The Lancaster New Era says of it:

"Charles H. Leyburne's Bon Ton Stock company inaugurated a week of repertoire on Monday night by presenting "The Princess of Patches" to a large audience; the capacity of the house was tested. The piece, by Mark E. Swan, is no stranger here. It contains enough excitement to suit the most exacting, but the comedy is judiciously placed throughout the book, and the interest is never allowed to lag. Miss Emma Bunting in the title role had the burden of the performance on her shoulders, but the little lady acquitted herself most admirably. Mr. Leyburne as Waggles was extremely funny."

Little Egypt Company.

The Little Egypt Burlesque company will be the attraction at the Gaiety theater commencing Thursday matinee, Oct. 4, for three days. This show is up-to-date in every respect. The specialties are above the average with this kind of a show. Little Egypt will appear in new dances, and without a question will wear some of the finest stage costumes ever seen in this city.

The burlesque, "Forbidden Fruit," is funny, full of bright music, dances and grand electrical effects.
