the labor organization is in the world of labor. And so all industry and all enterprise of our civilization advances through this tendency to consolidation, combination and co-operation. It may be that the day will come when every employe of every department store in America will be a stockholder in the corporation, as is the case in France. The Illinois Central railroad has already begun to divide its profits among its employes, making every employe of that great railroad a stockholder in the enterprise. All of these developments on the farm, in the store, railroad a stockholder in the enterprise. All of these developments on the tarm, in the store, on the railroad, in labor and capital of our industrial development, flave their roots in the increasing intelligence of the beeple and the increasing intelligence of the people and the increasing interdependence upon each other which our advancing civilization brings. They are as inevitable as they are natural, and they ought to be full of blessings for all mankind. But in their development, evils have developed, just as evils have attended every advance of human progress. No man is perfect. No nation is perfect. No society is perfect. Not even all the people of the world are perfect. Their progress is full of crudities.

Party Attitudes Contrasted.

What now is the attitude of the two gree parties on fais elemential social and industrial question? The difference between the party of construction and the party of destruction on this great issue of trusts is that the party of construction says that the evil shall be remedied without destroying the principle of good which runs through all, and the party of destruction says that this whole development should be absolutely destroyed. According to the party of destruction, instead of the great building, we must go back to the many little and separate buildings; instead of the department store, we must go back to the many little, separate, high-priced shops; instead of great railway systems, we must go back to the many dangerous, high-priced, badly-served roads of which it was formed; instead of the organizations of labor, we must have each workingman caring for no one priced, badly-served roads of which it was formed; instead of the organizations of labor, we must have each workingman caring for no one but himself. Instead of permitting great combinations of capital to do their proper work, by which alone great bridges have been built across the widest rivers, by which alone cables have been laid over all the seas, by which alone that network of intelligence called the telegraph, has been woven all around the globe, by which alone the floating publices of great ship lines travel the ocean highways of the world, all are to be dissolved and each man for himself, with what little wealth he can accumulate, achieve his insignificant industrial results. In other words, all the forces of civilization are to be reversed. We are not to stand still; we are to run backward to where mankind began. If this is not true, then there is no logic in the proposition of the party of destruction. But it is not a question whether this is true or not; it is openly declared by the leader of modern Democracy that his purpose is to make war upon that whole industrial, financial and social development of which the combination of capital is a single and not the most important instance. Is that the programme which appeals to the young men of this country? Will that best develop this nation's resources? Will that best serve the interests and glory of the American people—aye, will that best serve the interests and future career of young men themselves?

Young Blood in Demand.

Young Blood in Demand.

I repeat that these great enterprises give young men their opportunities. There is just one element that these great concerns absolutely need, and that is young blood, young brain, young energy and young nerve. The head of a great company in Indiana the other day was asked by the head of a great financial institution whether his company did not want to borrow some noney. "No," came the reply, "we do not need money. "No," came the reply, "we do not need money. "No," came the reply, "we do not need money. "No," came the reply, "we do not need money. "No," came the reply, "we do not need money. "No," came the reply, is do not need money. "No," came the reply, is do not need money. What we need and are looking for every day is young men with brains." These great combinations of business are only possible when conducted with mathematical accuracy, with an all-seeing omnipresent enterprise; and so it is that their first need, their last need, is the strongest young men that can be found in the land. This theory is clear, is it not? What now are the facus? Mr. Schwab, the head of the great Carnegie Steel company, rose from a boy in the works, and he is only 37 years old today. George W. Perkins, a vice president of the New York Life Insurance company, and one of the most successful fusurance managers in the world, is 38 years of age, and rose to his present position from a boy in one of the company's western offices, without money or influence. The vice president of the Chemical bank of New York, the greatest private banking corporation in the world, is William II. Porter, now 39 years old. He rose to that position from a messenger boy without an influential friend or acquaintance in all the world. These are illustrations within my own personal observation. And the history of every successful business enterprise in this country, which the party of destruction in this campaign declares is taking away from young men their opportunities, is on the contrary the history of the constant and certain and absolutely necessary advance of young men from the lowest positions to the very head and generaliship of these great industrial armies, all of which are developments of civilization itself. For civilization is nothing more than the inter-dependence of human beings upon cach other, instead of the dependence of each individual upon himself. Therefore, civilization requires of each man the most exacting discharge of his duties. And so it is that these great industrial enterprises of production, transfer and discharge of his duties. And so it is that these great industrial enterprises of production, transfer of the dependence of portunities away from the young man, afford an increased number of opportunities to the young man. To destruy this development of civilization, whose two great principles are combination and co-operation, is to destroy civilization itself. And yet that is what the party of destruction proposes. That is what the party of destruction gramme is not to remedy an evil, but to destroy a development.
