Privileges of School Extended. The privileges of the International Correspondence Schools have been extended to employees of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad, and the plan has been approved by all of the heads of departments. The following joint circular, just issued, will explain the manner in which the men may avail themselves of this opportunity: THE DELAWARE, LACKAWANNA AND WESTERN RAILROAD COMPANY, JOINT CIRCULAR.

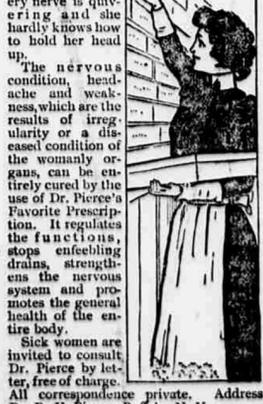

Scranton, Pa., Nov. 1, 1900. To All Concerned: An arrangement has been made with the International Correspondence Schools, of Scranton, to extend their privileges to employees of this company. Their solicitors will go over our line within a few days, and their instruction cards will visit terminal and division points at suitable intervals. Having personal knowledge of the benefits to be derived by a course of study in any of the branches offered by this school, the general manager is producing, and the satisfaction it is giving to railroad men on other lines, and knowing also its high standing as an educational institution, we cordially recommend it to all employees of this company who desire an improved education and a general knowledge of railroading, and urge them to avail themselves of this opportunity.

PELLING A REDWOOD GIANT. How It Is Cut Down and Made Ready for Shipping. From the San Francisco Call. Shall I point out to you the largest tree in the world? It was discovered recently by a party of loggers in the county of Tulare, far up among the headwaters of the Kaweah river. Its trunk is inaccessible to the despoiling axman, and it will stand eternally, the proudest king of the vegetable kingdom. Vast glacier-like peaks surround it, and by its roots float the rushing waters of the Alpine snows. The tree is over 400 feet in height, and up on its trunk, as high as a man can reach, measures 160 feet in circumference. It is a sequoia gigantea, or one of the Sierra redwoods.

There are two species of redwood and two forests of them in California—hence on the globe. The gigantic live among the majestic sugar and yellow pines which clothe with their coniferous foliage the steep slopes of the Sierra Nevada, while the sempervirens laves in the saty fogs which sweep along the north coast of California and upon the west slope of the coast range. Of these forests, originally 30,000, acre in extent, but 15,000,000 acres remain in their virgin state after thirty years of cutting. About 500,000 acres a year, therefore, seem to have disappeared under the combined aggressions of the woodman's ax and the devouring fire. Of the sempervirens only about 1,400,000 acres now exist, and this, it is estimated, contain not more than 47,000,000 feet of lumber. Not all the timber included in the above estimate stands in accessible situations. One acre of redwood will cut from 30,000 to 50,000 feet. Single trees have cut as much as 20,000 feet of first-class lumber, and on Russian river one operator cut 24,000,000 feet from 160 acres of land. This, however, was undoubtedly one of the best quarter-sections in the entire forest.

A Cross Clerk

Is a rarity. For the most part the young woman behind the counter is smiling and obliging, though her back hurts, her side pains, or her head throbs distractingly. The wonder is, not that a clerk is sometimes irritable, but that she so rarely shows irritation when every nerve is quivering with suffering, and she hardly knows how to hold her head up.

The nervous condition, headache and weakness, which are the results of irregularity or a diseased condition of the womanly organs, can be entirely cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It regulates the functions, stops enfeebling drains, strengthens the nervous system and promotes the general health of the entire body. Sick women are invited to consult Dr. Pierce by letter, free of charge. All correspondence private. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

MADE THE MONEY FLY. The Exceedingly Rapid Rate and Fall of "Jubilee Juggins."

Undoubtedly one of the greatest spendthrifts London has ever seen was Ernest Benzon, better known as "Jubilee Juggins." In less than two years this reckless youth ran through a sum of more than $1,250,000. At first the ordinary individual can hardly conceive how it is possible for a man to spend $25,000 a week, unless he is either establishing a large business or undertaking some great commercial enterprise. But "Jubilee Juggins" did nothing of the kind; he spent, says "Tit-Bits," his million and a quarter on enjoying himself on the turf and elsewhere.

Benzon's life story—or at least a brief portion of it—is, indeed, a romantic one. His father, it appears, was a famous metal merchant, but died when Ernest was quite a boy, leaving an immense fortune to be divided equally between an adopted daughter and his only son. Young Benzon was brought up by an aunt, who held decidedly peculiar views. She never informed the boy of the riches that awaited him, and during his infancy every penny he had was doled out with the utmost parsimony; his clothing was poor and mean, his education was anything but what it should have been, and such acquaintance as he was allowed to make were of the wrong sort. When he was 18 years of age he discovered, quite by accident, that his father had died a millionaire, and that when he became of age he would inherit a sum of more than $1,250,000.

Naturally, the boy lost his head on discovering the truth, which had been kept from him so that the fortune might grow. Within a week the youngster spread the news rapidly. Not only did his credit become limitless, but the money-lenders fairly sought him out to press loans upon him. His guardian and relatives lost all control over him, and before he was twenty-one Benzon had succeeded in running into debt to the tune of $175,000. Of his share of $1,250,000, $250,000 was ready cash. Most young fellows, even of extravagant ideas, would have made that sum do for a time, but within twenty-four hours Benzon drew out $250,000 to pay the debts of his minority, and to meet the expenses of a trip to Australia. He then had left in negotiable securities almost $1,000,000, but in ten days he was "dead broke."

Most of his vast fortune was lost by gambling. During the first four days of his stay in Australia Benzon lost $20,000 by being on the race course. In a few months he had dropped $225,000 under the Southern sun by placing his money on the wrong horses. Then he returned to England, and his remarkably heavy bets at the famous race courses throughout the country caused considerable comment at the time, both in racing circles and in the press. At the Kempton races, in Jubilee year, he bet $80,000 on one race and lost it! It was this wild wager that gave him the sobriquet of "Jubilee Juggins." For a week at a stretch after that the lost by gambling $75,000 a day. Occasionally luck was in his favor, and on one occasion he netted $25,000, but such days were rare.

the quality of timber in a standing tree are to be avoided. It is a most interesting sight to behold one of these forest giants fall. The process of cutting is affected both through the use of the ax and the saw. All axes are double-faced, through which much time is saved in chopping. Sometimes the axes start the cut on both sides of the trunk and at places about opposite each other through the thickness of the tree. After the chopping has penetrated to a depth of about two feet on each side the saw is then started in the line of the incision and the job completed with that instrument. Generally, however, the direction upon which the tree is to fall is determined and the cut is made in that direction to the depth of from one to three feet. Then the choppers pass to the opposite side and begin sawing at a point several feet higher than the place of the incision. As the saw moves through the heart of the plant the heaving and swaying where the wound is gaping. In doing this he lifts apart the cut and opens the section which the saw is making, thereby keeping free play for the saw. This is aided at times by driving wedges at the place where the saw entered. Presently it is apparent that the section is opening wider and wider and the tree is beginning to lean away from the cutters. They continue with their sawing a moment longer, then heave the trunk over the saw teeth. Another swish of the saw and these increase. They give a report like the firing of pistols and the rapidity of a Gatling gun. The sounds, getting very rapid, present a strange and continuous roar. Then, if the trunk is standing upright and the tree is large, you will get the impression that everything above is coming to earth; that the whole forest is falling. The great mass slowly starts to topple, cracking and exploding over and over again, until, with a fearful momentum it comes sprawling down, cracking and crashing and roaring and hitting the earth with a crump and thump as if a whole broadside of 15-inch bombs had simultaneously struck a nation. Pray, then, then, the forest giant. A kind of pitying sense comes over you, as though you had been witness of a tragedy. The prone monster seems to be some vast animal, which, after some resistance, had succumbed, and whose body is now stretched before you for its final spoliation. This sense is all the more pronounced as you observe the choppers quickly run over the trunk with their axes and cut away all the branches, each limb going like a vertical amputation. The great torso which emitted such a sound and displayed such motion a few moments ago is now low and helpless, giving scarcely a whimper as its parts are struck from it. Almost before you can realize it, the trunk is lying on its side, and the log men begin cross-cutting it into logs or sections from 24 to 30 feet, as long as it is desired the boards into which it is reduced at the mill shall be. This done, the logs are peeled of their bark, the cambium being used to pry off the thick integument, which is sometimes a foot in depth, the log is turned with jackscrews, when such is practicable, to get at the under side.
