THE BURGUNDER FUNERAL.
Will Be Held Today from the Residence in Wilkes-Barre.
The Wilkes-Barre News yesterday had the following editorial on the death of M. H. Burgunder:
"Only a few people had had intimation of the very serious illness of Manager M. H. Burgunder and the news of his death yesterday morning was a shock to his many friends throughout the city. His illness has been for only a few days and up to Sunday night was not considered as particularly dangerous, although there was considerable disturbance of temperature. Yesterday four physicians were called in consultation, but in spite of their allied efforts, the end came with terrible suddenness. The ailment, it is understood, was pneumonia, which reached the apical stage."
"Mr. Burgunder has been for years well known throughout this section of the state as a theatrical manager. He had charge of old Music Hall for many years before it was done away with to make room for the Sterling hotel. He was one of the movers in the erection of both the Grand and the Nesbitt theaters and was a stockholder and lessee of both of them. As a business man, he was keen and able and he had brought the amusement business in this city to a steadily rising grade of excellence and he had been a conspicuous factor in the great development of dramatic amusements in Wilkes-Barre and Scranton. Mr. Burgunder will be much missed in his field of business effort, for hardly another man hereabout knew the business as he did."
"The loss to his family, however, is the saddest part of all. Married only for a few years, he leaves a widow and two charming children. The family life has been almost ideal. He seemed a man in the very vigor of manhood and health and his years were those of the very flower of manhood's estate. His sudden and untimely death has caused his friends and acquaintances much sympathy is expressed for his family."
The funeral of Mr. Burgunder will take place at 2 o'clock this afternoon from his late residence on Northampton street, Wilkes-Barre. Interment will be in the Jewish cemetery at Hanover.

American citizens, settled down to routine business yesterday, just as if they had not on the day before gone through an election which, with its preliminaries, had kept the country all agog for the best part of the preceding summer and fall months. They read The Tribune's statement of the result, felt a spasm of pride that the city should have such an enterprising paper and went to work.

Of course there was nothing else talked of all day long, but no one lost any time by the discussions. It was all over, the result was known and the excitement of the race was as much a thing of the past as if it had been a steepchase and the horses were being led back to the paddock. There were those who wanted to tell how it happened and there were also those who would let them do it, but these latter were like the votes for Con Smith, not worth the counting. As a general rule, when these explanations sought an audience they met with a cold rebuff. Every one who was any one knew just as well as the next how the thing happened in every instance, and he didn't care to hear some one else explain how it happened with an explanation that didn't explain. Anyhow, as said before, the election was over and he was back to business.

SUCCESSFUL ONES.
The successful candidates were to be seen about town in the afternoon and at almost every step they were hailed by outstretched hands conveying congratulations. Congressman Connell was fairly overwhelmed with congratulations. Friends who had been led into worry by reason of his being in a three-cornered fight were the most exuberant in their congratulations.

Mr. Conry's aggressive fight and excellent showing evoked many warm words of praise for the promising young man. For Mr. Spencer, who "also ran" for congress, there was nothing but general commiseration that such an otherwise good fellow would allow his vindictiveness to lead him into a contest in which he would lose. His thousand votes out of a total of 30,000 was such a ridiculously poor showing that their recipient was subjected to pretty much the same color of satirical jibes as his fellow-independent, Cornelius Smith. Prospective revenue collectors and such like among the Spencerian satellites were a doleful looking lot as they were viewed here and there gathered in small groups telling each other how but for this, that or the other thing, the election or this thing would have obtained.

NO CONTEST TALK.
For the first time in years a first day after election passed off without any talk of contests. Messrs. Warnke and Bonn, Koch and Beck, Philbin and Timlin and Scheuer and Flaherty, who were elected or defeated as the case may have been, by what the friends of the candidates were small margins, did a lot of figuring from the open returns in the prothonotary's office, but not a whisper or any indication whatsoever of contest was heard or observed.

A feature of the day was the circulation of a story to the effect that Recorder-elect Emil Bonn had taken poison and was dying. It was twisted and turned into an attempted suicide yarn, and, despite its ridiculousness, gained some small credence. The Tribune, became generally known by noon time and the story was caused to subside. Comparatively little betting was done in Scranton this campaign outside of the customary betting on cigars, hats, gloves, suppers and the like. Not a single cash bet of any considerable proportion was reported. The women folks, it would appear from all reports, did their share of the friendly betting. Bets on candy and roses were the "stuff" they put up rather than having to shut up.

SHE HAD A BET.
One very anxious miss called up The Tribune office before daylight to ask if Mr. Spencer was elected. Thinking she was not serious, the man at the 'phone began to say jokes, but his jocosity was very coldly received. She wanted to know if The Tribune was of the kind enough to tell her if Mr. Spencer was elected; she had bet a box of candy on him and was awfully anxious to get it. The man at the 'phone gallantly begged to regret that Mr. Spencer had not been elected, but the chances of missing returns making him a winner were, it grieved him exceedingly to say, very slight. She said "Pshaw! Much obliged," and hung up the 'phone. And the man at the 'phone recalled an article he once wrote on "Why Women Should Vote."

If a county controller was elected yesterday that office will be filled, very likely, by P. W. Costello, one of the present county auditors. With figures from all except eight districts he has been at work since the election, and he has against 44 for F. L. Brown; 267 for John Wheeler, of Carbondale, and 237 for John E. Nallin. With the exception of Mr. Brown all the candidates conducted a secret campaign, each wishing to strike the majority on the part of Mr. Brown. Mr. Costello went at the matter with a determination to win and the chances are that he has succeeded. In most of the big Democratic districts he had men at working distributing lists of voters and instructing voters how to use them.

MAY BE OVERCOME.
There is no telling, though, but that his big bet may be overcome, as it is known that many of the election boards neglected to record the vote for controller on the open returns. The official count, which will commence today, will determine this.

POLICE PICKINGS.
A man entered the central station yesterday afternoon to see one of the police officers. He was told to see one of the judges of elections in Fell township and gave the visitor a $10 bill to pay the inspector out of. He could not make change and left the station, promising to change the bill. On his return he swore that he never received any money or had been in the station. Patrolman Rodman then arrested him and he today he gave a chance to explain his peculiar actions to the mayor.

Patrolmen Matthews and McColligan yesterday afternoon arrested a man who aroused their suspicions by his peculiar actions in Radin's pawnshop on Penn avenue. He entered this and asked to see two rings passed by a certain Annie Davis. He took the rings, paid the sum of $10 and walked away, refusing to give them back after they were once handed him for scrutiny.

SAUL AND DYER AGAIN ON TOP
MAYOR'S INJUNCTION IS DIS-SOLVED BY THE COURT.
Councils Can Do as It Pleases in the Matter of Settling Claims and the Mayor's Power of Interference Is Exhausted When He Exercises His Right of Veto—History of the Proceedings Up to Date—Grand Jury Will Make a Return Today—Other Court Matters.

Court yesterday dissolved the injunction secured by Mayor Moler to restrain City Controller Howell from countersigning the warrants for the much-disputed pay of ex-Patrolmen Saul and Dyer for the time select council was withholding its concurrence in the action of the mayor in removing them.

In substance the decision of the court was that the mayor had no standing. August 17, 1899, the mayor removed Saul and Dyer "for cause," but it was not until the first Thursday of November following that select council could be prevailed upon to concur in the action. In the interim the dismissed patrolmen offered themselves constantly for duty, but were not allowed to act.

In October, 1899, Saul presented a claim for $182 and in a case stated judgment was awarded him for the full amount. Dyer, in a letter to the mayor, so he alleges, made formal demand for $182, but this the mayor denies.

February 21, 1900, Mayor Moler, acting independent of council and against the judgment of the city solicitor, took an appeal to the superior court to prove his contention that when a patrolman is dismissed his salary ceases, no matter how long a text-waive it may be before the concurrence of select council is forthcoming. Last September select council passed a resolution directing the city clerk to draw an order for $182 and interest in favor of Dyer and Saul, and common council concurred in it. As was expected, the mayor vetoed the measure, but, as was also expected, the council passed it with practical unanimity over the mayor's veto. Thereupon the mayor sought and secured a preliminary injunction declaring the resolution void and restraining the controller from taking any action under its provisions.

Yesterday, when the rule to make the injunction permanent came to be heard, the court decided in favor of the contention of the ex-patrolmen's attorneys that the council had every right to make a compromise on these claims, just as they would on any other claim, and that the matter of the legality of the claims did not concern common council. As long as they had a moral right to this money there was no question, the court held, but that the council could adopt compromise measures. The mayor's power of interference was exhausted when he exercised his right of veto.

Welles & Torrey and Willard, Warren & Knapp represented Saul and Dyer. The mayor's attorney was John G. McAskie. Immediately after the dissolution of the injunction the ex-patrolmen made an effort to secure from the controller the full amount of their claims. Controller Howell, however, refused to pay them, inasmuch as the money appropriated for their salary has already been paid to Patrolmen Davies and Hockenberry, who were appointed to fill the vacancies caused by the two removals.

When the controller paid Patrolmen Davies and Hockenberry he required them to furnish indemnifying bonds for the full amount paid them, so that in case court should decide that Dyer and Saul were entitled to their salary, and that councils should decide to allow them it, he would be released from any personal responsibility.

He has already notified Hockenberry and Davies that they must refund the two months salary paid them, and if they fail to pay it back he will hold their bondsmen, John H. Fellows and Wade M. Finn, for the full amount. When the money is paid into the city treasury he will countersign warrants for the payment of Dyer and Saul, but not before.
