NORTHEASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

Israel P. Burt, of Waverly, N. Y., Casts a Ballot at the Age of 99. ipecial to the Scranton Tribune.

Towanda, Nov. 12 .- The oldest resiient probably in Northeastern Pennsylcania to cast his vote on election day was Israel Parshall Burt, of Waverly, N. Y., who will be one hundred years of age on March 19 next. He was born in Chemung county, N. Y., his father having settled in what is now Wellsburg, after returning from the American army, who died in 1830. Mr. Burt is still erect and has an unusually good memory, recalling events in the years long passed. His eyesight is dulled and be is somewhat deaf.

He well remembers going to an old mill at Factoryville on horseback. which was run by Elias Walker, when a small boy. At that time there was one house at Waverly, occupied by the grandfather of C. H. Shepard, who lives now on the farm. He tells of the stories told by his father of the encounters, concerning Spanish hill, in Waverly, between the Indians and General Sullivan there, at Horseheads and at Wellsburg. At that early period the county was nearly a wilderness, and he often tells of shooting deer and of other experiences in hunting.

Mr. Burt cast his first vote for John Quincy Adams in 1824, and has voted every election since that time, and has always voted a straight Republican ticket. He is now looking forward to celebrating his one hundreath birthday anniversary. His relatives are many and the family is more or less prominently connected with the history of Chemung.

The court reconvened here today and listened to a petition presented by certain electors of Monroe township, asking that the court investigate the facts more fully before arriving at a conclusion in the matter and alleging that the vote as returned to the court of one hundred and eight votes for H.
