SCRANTON, NOVEMBER 23, 1900.

The pathetic persistence of Com Paul excites general compassion; but the world is too busy for the past tense.

The Only Panacea.

HE URGENCY of other business is assigned as a reason why, at the coming short session of congress, no steps will be taken to carry into execution the mandatory section of the Fourteenth amendment which requires a reduction of the basis of representation in states practicing partial disfranchisement. Were the session twice as long and the other business inconstiterable there still would be found ingenious excuses for evading this duty. The plain fact is that the Republican party managers do not want to rekindle the old sectional animosities, but in their commendable concern for general harmony, they are in danger of conceding too much to the opposition.

We see no objection to plain speaking touching this matter. The South wants to disfranchise the negro and yet use him to pad out its representation in congress. This demand is intolerable for two reasons. First, it violates wilfully as plain a provision of the United States constitution as the English language is capable of expressing. But not only that it inflicts a distinct injustice upon a great majority of the people to please a minority; it clothes with unequal power the vote cast in the South at the expense of the vote cast in other portions of the republic. So long as these un-American demands are pressed, there will necessarily be a lack of genuine harmony between the Southern and the other states; harmony on a basis of unfair dealing is impossi-

Is there a basis of compromise? Yes, and it is highly important for all sections that the fact should be clearly understood. There can be no just objection to a restriction upon suffrage applied fairly to all males of voting age without regard to race, color or previous condition of servitude. If the bulk of the negro vote in the South is a menace to public advancement, no less is this true of the "poor white trash" vote. If one is excluded, the other should be with equal and exact fairness; and to both, after exclusion, should be held forth the opportunity and, as far as possible, the incentive for self-improvement to the degree of fitness for the electoral

Poor Vs. Rich.

OME COMMENT has been excited by the recent speech of Bishop Lawrence, of Massachusetts, at the New York chamber of commerce dinner, in which a note of warning was sounded at the growth of what the speaker called "the spirit of commercialism, the test of value by money, the gauging of social position by fortune, the loss of pity for the failures in life, the figuring of national bigness by national wealth and by the getting of foreign markets." More especially has this portion of the bishop's speech attracted Gentlemen, the people, the great common peo-ole, are suspicious that some great corporations and masses of wealth are protected, or their interests advanced in ways that are inconsistent with the rights of the people. They may have no material grounds for their suspicions, but they are suspicious, and so are many of you. Civilization cannot go on where there is mutual suspicion, and prosperity cannot go on while the people feel or think that the reverence for law by which property is safeguarded is not upheld.

op's idea is that lack of confidence prevails as to the prevalence of common hongsty. This was the substantial issue put to a vote of the people in the recent presidential election. Every attempt which ingenuity could devise was made to array the poor in one and the rich in the other and to repeat in the United States, in principle, if not in detail, the horriepizodes of the Paris commune. by directing one camp into an attack upon the other. It failed. Why? Because the rich outvoted the poor? Not at all. Because the rich coerced the poor? Certainly not. Simply because the great saving bulk of our American democracy, drawing its inspiration from common founts, inheriting common traditions and in the final analysis true to the principles of equality before the law, refused to be stampedel into a war of classes. If the suspicion which Bishop Lawattributes to the great common people really exists among them, ay be certain that they will run it down and convict or acquit as the evidence shall warrant. Anglo-Saxon are not yet obsolete in these United States. The machinery of popular retribution is at hand and well offed for every demonstated betrayal of a public trust. But the great common people have happily enough common sense not to fly into excesses of rage at the mere suggestion of current derbolts at phantoms. They are waiting for the critics of commercialism the exceptators of imperialism, the denunciators of octopuses to get rid of their gaseous rhetoric and to offer in evidence something substantial and tangible in the nature of facts.

Mr. Conger intimates that he is not satisfied with the punishment proposed for the offending Chinamen at Pekin. It is to be hoped that Minister Conger does not intend to advocate a Colorado standard of dispensing justice to the heathen of the unbappy kingdom.

Progress in Forestry.

T TITH THE ending of the season for field work it becomes possible to review what has been done the past summer by the division of forestry of the United States department of agriculture, a newly established institution designed to supply expert knowledge on practical questions of forestry.

Since May the division has had par-

Missouri, Colorado, South Dakota, Arkansas, Arizona, Washington, Oregon, California, a number of tree-planting states of the middle west, and, in a small way, in other states besides. Much new and valuable information has been collected, and a very large number of surveys has been made, of the results of which it will soon be possible to make practical use. The work which has thus been going on in the field consisted of making forest surveys and of gathering measurements and information about growth, stand, reproduction, etc. Much of it, as that in the Black Hills forest reserve, in the Adirondacks, and on the tract of the Sawyer & Austin Lumber company in Arkansas, is preparatory to the preparation of what are called "working plans," or plans for the management and utilization of given tracts of timber. The rest of the work of the field parties has been more of the character of investigations-as, for instance, an examination of the influence of forest cover on waterflow which was made on the watershed of the Arrowhead river in southern California, studies of the habits of growth and reproduction of the two most important lumber trees of the Pacific coast—the red fir and the redwood-and a survey of the results of tree-planting undertakings which have been carried on in the northern part of the Mississippi valley. During the coming winter the agents of the division will spend most of their time in working up the results of the summer's surveys and in preparing reports on them. That this expert work, assuming it has been intelligently performed, will In time have substantial value may readily be understood from one instance. The Black Hills reserve in South Dakota contains 1.211.680 acres. No other tract of its size in this country or abroad presents more favorable conditions for forest management. Markets are accessible on all sides, and there is a large and steady demand for timber. The forest, too, reproduces itself easily and grows with ting and burning have gone on in some places, the problem which is presented but rather utilizing and caring for an already well-established forest. In the 12,000 acres exact figures were collected regarding the size and kind of all standing trees. From such measurements estimates of the present stand and future yield of timber can be compiled, and on these the recommendations for the management of the of these recommendations will mean that this immense woodland will continue for centuries to supply immense quantities of marketable timber without exhaustion. It is along such lines as these that the great problem of conserving our timber supply, with its numerous collateral issues, such as irrigation, elimate chances, etc., must be solved; and the time to start is now.

Scranton is not the only city noted for its filthy streets. Reading also has been disgraced by the untidy condition of its thoroughfares and so intense was the sentiment of objection that prominent women of the city formed a street cleaning brigade and this week sixty of them appeared with sun-bonnets and brooms and there was suddenly a great metamorphosis in the aspect of the particular street which had merited their especial disapproval. We should shrink from the sight of women cleaning the streets of Scranton, yet it is possible that little reform in the broadcast sowing of loose paper and the unnecessary lack of neatness on the public thoroughfares will be chronicled unless the women in desperation shall undertake the matter.

Mr. John Strunk, of Middle Smith: field, who has lived to the age of 5; without ever having spent a day outside of Monroe county, was given a rousing birthday party the other day. It was an henor well earned. A man who can for 94 years resist the inclination to visit Scranton is certainly a

LITERARY NOTES,

An announcement of peculiar importance and interest is that Dr. Edward Eggleston will publish abortly "The Transit of Civilization from England to America in the Seventeenth Century," a historical work which represents a new undertaking in the writing of American history. In this unique volume the eminent historian pictures the literary, scientific and other influences which were brought to this country from Euclidean which were brought to this country from Eu-rope in the early years of our history. He shows the religious ideas which immigrants of the the religious ideas which immigrants of the seventeenth century brought with them, and the modification of these ideas by the strange environment and often appalling conditions which they encountered. In connection with this topic there is a striking study of superstition and selief in witchcraft. Mother English, folk speech, folklore, and literature are presented with an unequaled richness of knowledge. The moral code and weights and measures of conduct are ex-plained with an intimacy of knowledge which throws a new light upon the standards of the seventeenth century settlers. The medical practice of that century in England and in its American developments has never been described as it is in this book, which furnishes here, as elsewhere, new pages of history. It is well within bounds to say that no such book on culture in the seventeenth century has ever at peared in England or America. "The Transit of Civilization," which is easily the most important historical work of recent years, and one thich stands alone in the field, will be published shortly by D. Appleton & Co. ties at work in New York, Tennessee,

Among the Americans besieged in Pekin wa William N. Pethick, confidential secretary to Li Hung Chang, of whose household he was left in charge when Earl Li made his famous tour the world in 1896. Mr. Pethick has written for the December Century a vivid account of an incident of the siege which involved the lega-tioners in imminent peril, from which they were rescued, not without some loss of life, mainly through the skill and courage of Herbert G. Squiers, first secretary of the United States legaon, an ex-army officer of tried ability. As result of this service, Mr. Squiers was appointed chief of staff to Major Sir Claude Macdonald, the
