CLAM WHEEL HAD A DEFECT

SUIT GROWING OUT OF IRON WORKS ACCIDENT.

Parents of Owen Davis Who Was Killed by the Bursting of the Fly Wheel in March, 1898, Want Damages—Case Develops Some Interesting Questions—Borough Council Attempted Some Special Legislation—Dean Jury Still Out—License Transfers.

Judge Edwards is engaged in the main court room in trying the case of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas W. Davis against Susan Spencer and others, owners of the Green Ridge Iron works.

The defense contends that the parents have no legal standing as plaintiffs, as their son was, admittedly, over twenty-one years of age at the time of the killing.

Young Davis was employed as roller's helper. It was his duty to drag the heated bars from the furnace to the rolls and in doing this he passed close to the fly-wheel and then took a position directly in front of it, some fifty feet away.

RETURN HAD BEEN MADE.

A hearing was held yesterday before Judge Edwards on the rule to compel Justice of the Peace D. M. Lynch, of Fell township, to show cause why he refused to make a return of the certiorari in the case of the commonwealth against John Meeley.
