GILLETTE WAS RATHER DOPEY

SUPPOSED TO BE SUFFERING FROM KNOCK-OUT DROPS.

He Was Picked Up on West Lackawanna Avenue Yesterday by the Police in a Helpless Condition. Slight Fire on Luzerne Street. Doll's Carnival Prizes on Exhibition—Tenth Wedding Anniversary. B. Y. P. U. Notes and Other Events of General Interest.

A fellow named Gillette, who resides in Dunmore, was locked up in the central police station last night in a helpless condition, and at midnight was somewhat delirious from the effects of what was supposed to be "knock-out drops." The patrol wagon was summoned to West Lackawanna avenue and Ninth street at 5:30 o'clock, where policemen found the man lying on the sidewalk.

From what could be learned about the case, the man had been on a protracted spree for several weeks and during that time wandered around the city. Yesterday afternoon he was seen in company with a woman on the West Lackawanna avenue bridge and later the couple entered a questionable resort not far from there. Some time afterward Gillette left the place alone, and staggered along the sidewalk until he reached Ninth street, where he fell unconscious.

A large crowd was attracted by the man's peculiar actions, and when several men attempted to arouse him they found it was impossible. A message was telephoned to police headquarters and Patrolmen John Thomas, Matthews, Hockenberry and Duggan responded with the patrol wagon and carried Gillette to the central police station. The fellow remained in a stupor until nearly midnight, when he was aroused by Desk Sergeant Ridgway.

The latter administered a dose of "jag drops" to the prisoner and his recovery is now assured. When asked about his actions, Gillette could not remember where he had been. He did not have any money on his person when arrested, but was fairly well-dressed.

SOUTH SCRANTON

A THANKSGIVING SOCIAL AT Y. W. C. A.

The Members of the Loyalty Club Gave an Entertainment for Their Many Friends—Family Social Conducted by Scranton Saengerunde. John A. Schroedel Captures an Eagle in His Yard—Twelfth Anniversary of Hickory Street Church.

A Thanksgiving social was given last night by the Loyalty club of the South Side Young Women's Christian association in the association rooms on Cedar avenue. It was well attended and was marked by deep Thanksgiving feeling. Prior to the social there was a short Thanksgiving gospel service.

The exercises were opened with a piano solo, which was given with splendid effect, by Miss Anna Scheuer, after which followed the reading of the president's Thanksgiving proclamation by Miss Freda Kornacher and the governor's proclamation by Miss Dora Scheuer, which was followed by the Loyalty club singing "America."

Miss Frances Klumme and Miss Freda Kornacher executed a difficult piano duet and Miss Minnie Hafner followed with a thoughtful and exceedingly well chosen selection reading on "Thanksgiving Day."

The Loyalty club then sang in spirited style their club song, after which games and music were indulged in and later several well-laden and snowy tables were brought in light and merry party indulged in light and daintily prepared refreshments.

A Family Social. The Scranton Saengerunde gave a most enjoyable family social last evening in the athletic hall, Alder street, which was well attended. During the forepart of the evening a jolly social hour reigned, which was followed by a fine literary and musical program given by the Saengerunde's jolly entertainers. After the entertainment refreshments were served and later the hall was cleared and dancing was indulged in until a late hour.

The following is the programme as rendered: March, "Ereofunfts," Hans Satt; song, "Ach Weist du es Noch," Saengerunde; phonograph selections, George Horbach; song, "Blod der Rose," Saengerunde; recitation, "Dr. Ungedaellige Apotheke," Hen Anton Fisch; song, "Hardenrostein," Saengerunde; recitation, "The Puzzled Dutchman," F. O. recitation, "Ein Salustreich," Anton Fisch; song, "Heilzichen Mein," Saengerunde; dialogue, "Eisen Bahn Abenteuer," Messrs. Fisch and Otto; song, "Nachtwachtstueck," Saengerunde.

The committee in charge was composed of the following: Messrs. Gustav Schultz, Fred Otto and J. J. Schneider.

North Scranton Notes. Indoor Baseball Being Resumed in This Part of the City—Two Social Events—Other Notes.

Two mines, composed of clerks from the stores of Penner & Dickerson and William Chappell, played indoor baseball at the Auditorium last evening. A large number of interested spectators saw the exciting game of this lively sport, which furnished so large an extent here a few years ago.

The contest was spirited from start to finish, and every close play of the clubs called forth applause. The game ended in favor of the club representing Penner & Dickerson's store, by a score of 5-7.

Two Social Events. Miss Jessie Ross entertained a number of her friends last evening at her home, on Blair avenue. Games and dancing were the chief amusements of the evening. At a seasonable hour refreshments were served.

Those present were: Messrs. J. J. Danvers, Thos. L. Miller, Eda Danvers, Margaret Edwards, Rena Edwards, Rachel Phillips, Lillian Ross, Anna Ross, Jessie Ross and Miss Bishop, of Wilkes-Barre; Messrs. Garfield Smith, Thos. Garfield, Griffiths Thomas, William Norback, William Igler, Joseph England, Oswald Price and David Evans.

Miss Emma Crohamel was pleasantly surprised at her home on Grove street last Thursday evening. A very pleasant time was spent by those present. Refreshments were served. Those present were: Messrs. Freda Staub, Sarah Courtright, Ruth Greby, Mathe Losh, Edith Miller, Grace Moore, Amelia Eckerley, Lizzie Eckerley, Margaret Hildebrand, Annie Phillips, Mary Phillips, Emma Crohamel, Lizzie Crohamel, Emma Crohamel, Marie Gehling; Messrs. SNAKES IN DEADLY COMBAT

Methods of the Rattler and the King Snakes in a Duel to the Death.

From the Youth's Companion. If the rattlesnake is justly called the king of America's woods and rocks, yet his crown is not held without danger, since he is hunted diligently and successfully. His fangs are, indeed, deadly, and he wears a fine suit of armor, but the deer and the wild hog never fail to attack him, and he has an enemy of his own still more dangerous to him.

Snakes are divided into three classes. Those which are venomous, the constrictors and those which are neither. Unless the second of these are wonderful for their size, they secure little or no attention, and yet they are generally beautiful in color, graceful in action and often our best friends.

In Florida we have two constrictors especially noticeable—the black racer, which grows to a length of twelve feet and makes a business of warping on rats and other small deer the farmer hates; and the king snake, whose mission seems to be the extermination of the rattler.

One day I was returning from a day's hunt, at peace with the world and myself, when I heard a squirrel scolding as if he were a ward politician the night before election. The noise he made was so loud and so insistent that I turned out of my way to see what could be the matter.

I found the fellow on the trunk of a pine, about ten feet from the ground, jumping about as if in convulsions. He would flourish his tail wildly, scold in anger, threaten an assault, run back a little way up the trunk, and then return and scold again.

I looked carefully and saw that his anger was directed at a rattlesnake that lay coiled at the foot of the tree. The snake was compressed into a ball, from the middle of which its rattle sounded continuously; its blazing light eyes were fixed unflinchingly upon those of the squirrel.

The buzz, buzz, droned on the summer air with a sleepy effect, but the squirrel scolded in an ever ascending key. But for the hint of the squirrel's eyes I could never have located the rattler. His color and his variegated markings offered but little contrast to the surroundings. His monotone of noise was indefinite, and to sight as well as in sound he seemed only a blur against the background of the dark sand on which he lay.

Was the squirrel only curious to satisfy himself as to the character of that strange object, or was he hypnotized? I have often amused myself by exciting the violent curiosity of that little animal, but never did a waving or jumping object awaken such intense and painful emotion as the rattler always demands.

I knew what must soon follow: that the squirrel's eyes would soon grow weary, that he would grow dizzy, and finally tumble from the tree, hang a moment by one claw, and then drop into the jaws of the living death that lay in wait. I raised my rifle to save the little fellow, when the tragedy was interrupted from another quarter.

Swift as a light, a form raced on the stage. It was clothed in a gleaming coat of beautiful white and black spots; it shifted and shone like a necklace of precious stones, and I knew the king snake claimed a victim.

The newcomer was smaller than the rattler; its ground color was greenish gray, and the spots scintillated in the sunlight which sifted down upon the scene from the tangled branches overhead.

At the first rustle of its approach the rattler lost all interest in the squirrel, which ran back into the tree.

The king snake held its head high and raced around the rattler in a wide circle, while the rattler tried to slink away. The king darted forward as if to attack, and the rattler threw himself into a coil. The king was again away and racing around, with a swiftness the rattler seemed unable to follow with his eye. The rattler was cowed already; his crest was lowered, his buzz, buzz was jerky and uneven, and although he presented a very different appearance from the self-confident arbiter of the woods which he had seemed when I had first saw him, I could think of nothing but some human bully surprised in the act of torturing his helpless victim, and suddenly, as if by compulsion, he was compelled to face an adversary worthy of his strength. The king snake seemed to enjoy the situation as a cat does her cruel dallying with a mouse.

Round and round went the king snake, and the rattler followed the movement till its neck was twisted. Whenever it attempted to turn the king would spring forward, and it was evident that the first failure of the rattler in swiftness would be the signal for muscle to clinch with venom. The king would race from left to right, and then reverse, and if the rattler failed to follow that would be the end of him. This happened, and I saw the king in the air, but could not catch the strike, so instantaneous was it.

There was a confusion of flying pine needles in a cloud of white dust, and I saw that two inches of the king's coil was about the throat of the rattler. Over and over they went, the king's head above that of his enemy, and a curve of his body acting as a buffer to keep up his motion, which enabled him to take another turn and still another.

And so the struggle continued, till the rattler did not writhe freely, and he was held as a vine wraps a tree. When he lay still the king snake began to uncoil himself slowly, and every motion of his enemy the constrictor's folds contracted and crushed with killing effect. Even when there was only a quiver of the tail, the king still gripped the throat. It was plain he had a wholesome respect for the fangs that were still terrible.

As a last precaution the king applied his nostrils delicately to those of the rattler, and repeated that several times, as if to detect the faintest breath. Satisfied at last, it released its enemy, but still watched, ready to assume its hold at the slightest sign of life.

There I left him, keeping grim guard over the body of the vanquished foe. As I turned away, the voice of the squirrel in the tree broke out again, saucy and defiant as it always is, but no longer filled with agony and terror, as at first.

The people of the Southern Appalachian mountains number about 2,000,000, their descent being from the Scotch-Irish, French Huguenots, English and Germans. They have been in these mountains since long before the revolution. They love their homes, and mingle but little with the outside world.

Moths fly against the candle flame because their eyes can bear only a small amount of light. When, therefore, they come within the light of the candle they are blinded, and their vision confused, and as they cannot distinguish objects they pursue the light itself and fly against the flame.

Death from suffocation is pleasant, according to Joseph Grady, a Winsted (Conn.) plumber, who was in a "cave-in" until unconscious. He said: "I thought of every prayer I had heard and repeated them over and over. I could hear the men working above me. Then came sweet music, the sweetest I ever heard. That was the last I remember."

The remarkable number of deaths by drowning proves the helplessness of persons venture into waters without knowing how to swim. About 80 per cent. of those drowned last summer did not save that knowledge. This is all the more wonderful when we know that swimming may so easily be had. A person of average physique should be able to swim several hundred feet after a dozen lessons.
