THE REDEDICATION.

THE CHURCH OF ST. ROSE OF LIMA REOPENED.

Amid Solemn and Impressive Ceremonies, with Many High Church Dignitaries in Attendance, with Beautiful Music and a Vast Congregation, the Magnificently Finished and Ornate Church Edifice Is Thrown Open for Worship.

The Roman Catholic Church of St. Rose de Lima, which has been in process of remodeling for nearly two years, was yesterday re-dedicated and thrown open for worship amid scenes of impressive solemnity, grandeur and beauty. The pictures presented to the gaze of more than fifty-five hundred worshippers and members of the congregation was one that will probably never be effaced from their recollection. The many clergymen of the church in attendance, some of them in the purple vestment that symbolizes the episcopacy in the church; the wonderfully magnificent harmony that swelled and reverberated and sank and rose again in triumphant peens of joy and awe and more fell to raptured melodies, sweet and low, and then changed to notes of mourning and sorrow, rising from thence to the supreme surges of happiness; the life-like stately and warm, freshly painted Scagliola frescoes that adorned the interior of the structure; the white marble altar glowing with the warmth and color of its illuminations—all these made a picture the like of which the majority of beholders never before saw and will probably not again see in this life.

The services in connection with the re-dedication really began at 7:30 o'clock yesterday morning, when Bishop Hoban, of the Scranton diocese, blessed the new church, both inside and outside, the furnishings, the material and spiritual foundations of the structure and consecrated the new altar. He celebrated a low mass upon the newly consecrated altar in presence of a large number of priests.

At 10:45 the morning service was begun by a prelude upon the pipe organ, accompanied by the Mozart orchestra and a large choir under the direction of Professor Haydn Evans. Then came the procession from La Hache's "Missa Pa. Prae." The visiting clergymen, headed by Bishop Hoban, marched up the center aisle of the church and into the sanctuary. Archbishop Ryan, of Philadelphia, was at the rear of the procession. A number of acolytes accompanied the priests.

The ushers were all young men selected from the Catholic societies of the city, three on each side. They had a purple badge with silver lettering, viz:

1875—SILVER JUBILEE—1900.
Archbishop Ryan celebrated pontifical mass and high Mass, Rev. Bishop of Scranton, Mass., preached the sermon, taking his theme from the chapter of Genesis wherein is described the vision of Jacob and the promise of God that he should be the instrumentality of Catholicity in the west and in the east.

The reverend clergyman began his address by saying that it was a personal privilege for him to tell his joy and deep religious satisfaction to feel his soul in the presence of all the beautiful gifts of this church and to feel that they were consecrated to God. He offered his congratulations as a guest to the pastor and his parishioners. Continuing, he said:

"And as I look here and there and see the multitude of pleasing things and gather them into a most pleasing vision I feel that you have gathered a multiplicity of the offerings of your soul and grouped them about the altar of your hopes. No other element but the Catholic faith with their religion and union could accomplish a work like this. It is the offering of your hearts, your hopes, your love. We are told in the passages sacred scripture we have just read that Almighty God pledged to Jacob the instrumentality of Catholicism in the west and in the east. Is it to be wondered at, my dear people, that Jacob set up a monument and named it the House of God? But you are privileged to see more and infinitely greater things that Jacob, even in his prophetic vision, beheld. You are privileged like him to erect a monument and one set up and consecrated to the service of the same God. This day must be for you a day of Christian joy, of deep satisfaction, of holy work planned and accomplished. Is it not well, therefore, that today should be a day of rejoicing? Lift up your souls in thanksgiving that you are associated with a church that is erected in the faith of Catholicism. The name of Catholic which is affixed and given to your church becomes honorable and high, because during long centuries the name has been stamped upon the church of Christ. The Catholic today has a glory known to none other. This day, therefore, should be a day of rejoicing to you, because of the promise given to Peter, and which has been handed down to us through the centuries, that through the days of persecution he should spread abroad through the world the word of the church of Christ.

"This church, in its providence embracing all the nations of men, is unlike all other denominations and religious institutions. Can we not, dear Christians, friends and brethren, in faith with God, rejoicing that by our sacrifices and redemptions we can proclaim to the world that we are members of this church? It is your glory that this church, which the world calls Catholic, embraces all the nations of the world.

The bishop dwelt upon the early foundation of the church, saying that the Catholic church was the first religion instituted and had been unwavering in its fidelity to God through all the centuries that had passed. And he paid a glowing tribute to the virtues of the followers of his teachings. "One Peter, one rock, one foundation, and the church resting upon no foundation except the rock that the apostles founded. The joy of the Catholic heart is emphasized by the promise that God will never abandon his children. This promise that God has given us brings to us this truth, that out of the church and away from the hearing of God, man is reduced to the pitiful condition described by St. Peter, 'Lord, where shall we go and what will become of us?' So, during all the ages, during all time, the powers have tried to destroy us and our faith, but the church has emerged triumphant until now, in the beginning of a new century, it is grander and more beautiful than ever. Only from the work can come the assurance that God will not abandon His people. It behooves us to obey God rather than man. God promises that He will never abandon his children. 'I will send you a parent who will teach his children all things.'

At the close of the sermon the offering was taken. The offering was a very large one. Then the concluding portion of the mass was chanted by Archbishop Ryan. Bishop Hoban made a short address, thanking the parishioners for their offerings in erecting the beautiful structure and the congregation for their generosity. Father Coffey then spoke to his flock. He told of his happiness and pride at the completion of the work they had set out to do.

The officers of the pontifical mass were: Celebrant, Most Rev. P. J. Ryan, archbishop, of Philadelphia; deacon of the mass, Rev. E. S. Phillips; sub-deacon of the mass, Rev. E. J. Melley; deacons of honor, Rev. M. J. McManus and Father Crane; arch-deacon, Rev. E. A. Garvey; master of ceremonies, Rev. P. C. Winter; assistant master of ceremonies, Rev. Walter Gorman.

The musical portions of the morning's service were:

The choir was under the leadership of Prof. Haydn Evans and was a large one. It was assisted by the Mozart orchestra, conducted by Prof. William Lynott, and by the new pipe organ, with Prof. S. V. Stockman at the keyboard.

Evening Services.
The pontifical services began at 7:45 o'clock and the celebrant was the Right Rev. Bishop Fredericest. The preacher was the Very Rev. J. R. Teefy, C. S. B. Lack of space will not permit a detailed description of this service. The choir was the same as in the morning and with church singing assistants. The musical programme follows:

The Parade on Saturday Night.
The visiting clergy were welcomed to this city on Saturday night by a procession of all the Catholic societies, which assembled at the depot at 7 o'clock. Preceded by the Mozart band the societies and guests paraded from the depot to Main street, to Salem avenue, to Church street and to the archiepiscopal residence. The marshal of the parade was Anthony Padden, of the Young Men's Institute, and the chief of staff was P. F. Carroll. The guests viewed the parade from their carriages at the foot of Park place.

A Former Ceremony.
It was a most pleasing reminiscence to our esteemed townsman, Druggist B. A. Kelly, to recall that on the occasion of the dedication of St. Rose church twenty-seven years ago he had the honor of being one of the acolytes in the ceremony, and on this occasion his son, John, filled the same position.

THE NEW CHURCH.

The Beautiful Interior—The Paintings—The Elaborate Ornamentation.
Nowhere else in the Scranton diocese and probably not in the state is there a church so beautifully finished and decorated as is the remodelled Roman Catholic church of St. Rose de Lima. The spacious auditorium, the high vaulted ceilings, the symmetrical arrangement of the broad aisles and lofty, blended with the apostles in warm paintings abounding in profusion, the high altar in highly polished Parian marble, and on each side of it the massive pillars of red granite, round and square, in Corinthian and Ionic forms.

Standing at the high altar, a massive structure of white Parian marble, designed and made in Italy, the view down the nave is one that inspires the gazer with a sense of grandeur and loftiness, blended with the apostles in warm paintings abounding in profusion, the high altar in highly polished Parian marble, and on each side of it the massive pillars of red granite, round and square, in Corinthian and Ionic forms.

Behind the high altar is a touching and finished conception of the crucifixion. It is an original design by Scagliola. The work is a triumph of art. The face of the dead Saviour is in that repose of solitude which would make you think that He had just said, "Forgive them, Father, for they know not what they do." At the foot of the cross are the faithful few. In the sweep of the vaulted arches overhead near the high altar is a representation of the Assumption. The virgin, with outstretched arms, surrounded by angels is ascending. Her drapery falls in graceful folds; her expressions are marked, natural, sweet. The coloring is of the softest and the highest bits of white and blue. The expression of the virgin is a painting of the mother of God appearing to St. Dominic, at which time she instituted the rosary. Near to St. Dominic, in kneeling posture, is St. Teresa, the patron of the poor and sick.

The death of St. Joseph in serene, eternal peace, is the subject of a painting over the statue of St. Joseph. To the left of the statue of the Blessed Virgin is another exquisite painting, "Jesus Blessing Children." St. Joseph is a greater number of figures represented here than in any other picture in the church, but they are all grouped in easy, graceful poses, with no crowding or confusion. Every figure stands in plain view. A companion picture to this is on the other side of the altar, next to the "Death of St. Joseph." It represents St. Ann, the mother of the Blessed Virgin, teaching her.

In the recess of the high altar are angels in light and shadow, holding the lamp of the faith. The ceiling of the north transept is the chalice and host, surrounded by wheat and grapes; in the south transept the Lamb and banners. Over the sanctuary, on the north side, and in the nave, are the evangelists, St. Matthew and St. John, with St. Peter between them; on the south side, St. Mark, St. Matthew and St. Paul. In line with these, on either side of the church, are the apostles, an equal number on each side. In the gallery ceiling, alongside of the choir, are St. Gregory and St. Cecilia, the patrons of music.

Within the sanctuary and in the transept is the statue—the statue of the Blessed Virgin, holding the infant Jesus, holding the place of honor, one on each side of the altar. St. Rose, patron of this church; St. Elizabeth, patron of the sick; St. Anthony of Padua; the Holy Family and the Pietà, the last representing the dead Jesus in His Mother's lap, after coming down from the cross; the Argel Guardian and the Sacred Heart, make notable and appropriate selections. Another statue, in the north transept, in thanksgiving, on the right side, at the summit of the marble columns, which stand on each side of the circle of the altar arch, are two large cherubs.

In the north transept is a large stained glass window, representing purgatory. On one side is a picture with chalice in hand, offering holy mass. On the other side is the mother of God, with beads. In the south transept is a companion window representing heaven. Christ is crowning redeemed souls, the Father is in the attitude of blessing them; angels are standing about with instruments of music. Moving down the nave, on the Gospel side, the first window represents Christ and the apostles at Emmaus. The second window shows Christ in the house of sisters. The next window is Christ appearing to Margaret Mary. The fourth represents St. Augustine and his mother, St. Monica, in thanksgiving. On the right side of the altar, moving down the nave, the first window depicts the Magdalen washing the Saviour's feet with her tears and drying them with her hair. The second is "The Visitation." The next window, on the right side, representing an angel telling Mary that she is to become the mother of God. The last figured window is St. Vincent de Paul, representing the good saint caring for the homeless. In the north transept, behind the organ, a window depicts St. Rose being crowned by angels. In one panel is St. Cecilia and in the other King David. These windows are all imported.

The statues of the cross, in high relief, are also imported and with their ivory and gold trimmings are particularly noticeable. The communion table, or altar rail, with gates in polished brass, is an imported article of furniture. On the altar table are in oxidized silver trimmings placed between the rows of pews in the body of the church. In the ceiling, around the altars and in the transepts.

The outside of the church has been veneered with pressed brick, the steeple has been cut down and a more suitable one built. The basement has also been improved in the remodeling of the church. The pews of the church are of white oak, finished in their natural color.

The church is a beautiful one, and Carbondale churchmen, of whatever denomination should be proud to exhibit it and claim it as one of the institutions of the city.

DIED AT THE HOSPITAL.

William Jenkins' Death, Resulting from Appendicitis, a Surprise to His Friends.

William G. Jenkins died late on Sunday night at the Emergency hospital as the result of a case of appendicitis. He had gone to the hospital on Tuesday morning to have an operation performed at the advice of a physician. At the hospital his case was regarded as a most hopeless one on account of the long-continued nature of the case. The verminifer had entirely decayed and the bowels were greatly inflamed. After the operation he slowly lost strength until the last. He was resigned when told that the end was near and asked to see several of his friends.

Mr. Jenkins was born in this city Feb. 22, 1873. He was the son of Thos. and Emma Jenkins, the former of whom died some years ago. Of late he was employed by the Hendrick company, a member of the Knights of Malta and Trinity Sunday school. He is survived by his mother and a brother and sister, Mrs. Edwin E. Boucher and Joseph Jenkins, all of this city.

The funeral services will be conducted this afternoon at 2:30 at his late home, 51 Park street, by Rev. Rollin A. Sawyer, rector of Trinity parish. Interment will be made in Maplewood cemetery.

A BEAUTIFUL PLAY.

A Favorite Actor to Appear in "Mavourneen" on Tuesday.

Chauncey Olcott, whose advent is always an event in Carbondale, will appear at the Grand next Tuesday, presenting the great play, "Mavourneen." This play is a strong romantic play of the time 1774, and the scenery and costumes are most beautiful. It gives Mr. Olcott an excellent chance to display his charming personality and to consistently introduce new songs that are always an important factor in any performance wherein he figures. The production will be given with a strong cast, magnificent scenery, and Mr. Olcott's charming tenor voice will be heard in five beautiful songs.

At the Protestant Churches.

At the Berean Baptist church yesterday morning Rev. Dr. Whalen took his morning theme, "The Ministry of the Holy Spirit." At the Methodist church in a holy to listen to the annual sermon. At the Congregational church Rev. M. C. Elliott, the pastor held his annual Decision day services. At all services an opportunity was given any who desired to enter a Christian life to do so. This morning sermon was devoted to the subject, "A Ripe Christian." The evening service consisted of a sermon in song, with a choir of thirty-six voices. There were solos, duets, quartets and full choruses.

Will Be a Treat.

The singing and dancing ability of the talent that exploits that new farcical comedy, "Pack of Cards," is said to be the above the average. The comedy organization, for all the very attractive musical gems as well as many unique specialties are introduced during the action of a really funny farce. The company appears at the Grand theatre on Saturday night. The show is only a shadow of a plot, but its novelties are so cleverly interwoven around this thread of complications and misunderstandings that the farce has a freshness seldom seen in such productions.

Dr. Delaney Promoted.

The numerous friends in this city of Dr. Matthew Delaney will be pleased to hear that he has received further advancement in Uncle Sam's army service. Dr. Delaney was this week appointed first assistant surgeon at the United States Army Medical School. This position entitles him to the rank and pay of a captain in the regular army.

LITTLE TRIED TO INTIMIDATE WORKERS' UNION.

WANTED TO USE THE MINE

Refused to Permit the Editor to Use the Organization for His Own Selfish Political Ends Little Began to Attack the President of District No. 1—Another Chapter Which Shows Why the Scrantonian Presses to Love Organized Labor.

Thomas D. Nicholls, president of District No. 1, of the United Mine Workers of America, has given out the following statement:

As the Scrantonian has for the past few weeks been making charges against leaders of the United Mine Workers (district and national) of political intrigue, and last Sunday in connection with the annual offering for the society was taken. In the evening Pioneer council, No. 832, Junior Order United American Mechanics, held a meeting at the church in a holy to listen to the annual sermon. ACCUSED MITCHELL.

He stated that President John Mitchell had received money for settling the strike, and that he could name the sum. I suggested that it was very queer if the coal corporations would give money to settle a strike which cost them several millions of dollars. He claimed to have listened to interviews between "Mr. Guernsey" and President Mitchell, through last radiator pipes and over paper, also that he had photographic records of other conversations. He accused the whole of the officers of having made a political deal with the Republican party. It was true, he said, that he had made a deal with the coal corporations, but that he had advanced in wages he gained. The man who makes such accusations as the above is only fit mentally to run such a paper as the Scrantonian.

During the interview he suggested that I make a statement in the press which would reflect the other. I suggested my statement was merely a true statement and that I expected that he would suggest that I make a statement that I did not give my statement for political effect. I said you can say that for me in your paper if you wish. As I said I was near we went up to the station and waited for the train. He stated that he wished to speak to Mr. Mitchell. When the train arrived, President Mitchell was not on board, but his secretary was, and came away with me to Nanticoke, where President Mitchell was to speak that night. I had supposed Mr. Little knew that President Mitchell had not arrived, and I afterwards argued all about him.

After arriving home I was surprised to see Mr. Little come to the door, and as though he had a claim on me, asked me why I had left him. He again made claims of being my friend, and wanted me to make a statement that I did not wish my political effect, and that he could so write it down. He asked for paper, which I gave him. He then wrote the statement which appeared in the Scrantonian, and which is as follows:

"The statements made by me to a reporter of the Scranton Tribune of this date have no political significance whatever, and are not to be understood as an endorsement of Mr. Nicholls or any other candidate."

FIRST PART OF IT.

This is the first part of my statement as written by Little and this I said I would agree to sign my name to. But that the following part I did not wish to state under my name, and I signed the last part. "I believe that organized labor should stand by its friends in every political fight, and fully realize the importance of the movement of truth, which no one can contradict, and therefore do not fear your attacks." He then said that he would print the part of the statement I approved of, stating it came from me, but would not print the whole of it and interpreted to mean that I was against certain candidates and favorable to others.

Mr. Little got angry and said if I did not sign it all I would not sign any, and said that on the following Sunday he would print the whole of it and say that I refused to sign it. Then I said: "You have professed friendship in coming on this mission, and now, because I refuse to allow you to put words in my mouth, you revile me with a false attitude and really intend to try and injure me. You can go ahead and fight me and we will see who comes out best. I have made a simple statement of truth, which no one can contradict, and therefore do not fear your attacks." He then said that he would print the part of the statement I approved of, stating it came from me, but would not print the whole of it and interpreted to mean that I was against certain candidates and favorable to others.

He then said that he would print the part of the statement I approved of, stating it came from me, but would not print the whole of it and interpreted to mean that I was against certain candidates and favorable to others.

In view of the assistance rendered by Mr. Nicholls to my movement, I felt morally obliged to give a true statement of the facts, when told that false stories were being circulated which said that William Guernsey was one of the greatest obstacles in the settlement of the recent strike, and was asked if the contract was not made and for a true statement. If I do any business with the operator I shall not be ashamed to admit it. As Mr. Nicholls was the president of the individual operators' association, he was able and did call both them and the large operators together, and caused a proposition to be submitted which ended the strike.

QUESTION AT ISSUE.

The question at issue should be whether as officers of the mine workers we were justified in accepting the services of Mr. Nicholls as an intermediary or not. If so, then as a business proposition we were justified in acknowledging such services.

Mr. Little left my home and a few hours later I returned to Wilkes-Barre to meet Mr. Mitchell, who came on a later train. Little was on the platform and again proposed that I put a statement in the press, adding that I try and threaten that if, before 2 o'clock Saturday afternoon, one was not forthcoming he would proceed against me. This I treated with contempt. He desired and expected that, according to his threat, he would have the question aired in the Scrantonian the next Sunday. This he failed to do, but began berating labor leaders in general.

Mr. Little has done more than any other man that I know of to try and bring the organization into politics. He has on several occasions sent his reporter out to visit the local unions, or leaders of the locals, to have resolutions of sympathy endorsed by them. I myself have been a recipient of a printed resolution of this kind, accompanied by a letter, asking that I try and have it passed favorably upon by my locals, and on another occasion have been asked by his representative to publicly express sympathy for him when in prison.

Much can be said in necessary of the methods which he used to try and injure, through the aid of the mine workers, the success of his political schemes. In a recent article, under the name of "William Williams," he suggests that in the next convention the leader of the mine workers be thrown out. I could not resist the temptation, but that convention was introduced in our district convention to endorse the Scrantonian if it was through out, several delegates stating that he was not a fit paper to introduce into our home and among our children. Concerning the convention acting upon the leaders, I will say that the convention is the proper place and the proper party to do so if they deem it necessary, and not the Scrantonian. Respectfully yours,

T. D. Nicholls,
District President U. M. W. of A.

CORONER'S JURY COULD NOT DECIDE

Andrew Itchik Died from a Fracture of Skull but It Is Not Known What Caused the Fracture.

Whether Andrew Itchik, of Mayfield, fell in the Lackawanna river and sustained a fractured skull, or whether he was struck in the head by an unknown enemy and the body afterwards thrown into the river, is a question which the coroner's jury was unable to decide at the inquest held on Saturday.

At all events, the man was not drowned. Death was due to a fracture at the base of the brain. The following verdict was rendered:

We, the undersigned jurors empaneled to investigate the death of Andrew Itchik, of Mayfield, who was found dead on the banks of the Lackawanna river in the rear of the Anthracite brewery in the city of Scranton, Dec. 15, 1900, find that the deceased came to his death in some manner unknown to the jury. We find also that the immediate cause of death was a fractured skull.

(Signed) W. H. Rulges, David Stanford, George W. Zimel, Charles Parry, P. W. Tague, W. A. Paine.

There is a mystery surrounding Itchik's death. He is known to have been a driver of a horse and wagon in Olyphant two weeks ago today, just before his disappearance. The last seen of him was when he was going towards Mayfield. No money was found on the body.

WHILE GOING TO A FIRE.

Chief Zizemann Had a Very Narrow Escape.

F. W. Zizemann, chief of the fire department, had a narrow escape from serious injury Saturday night. He was going to the fire on Parker street, about 7 o'clock, and at North Main avenue and Putnam street his carriage collided with a lumber wagon. Out on to the pavement went the chief and his carriage was badly damaged. Fortunately, the chief escaped without other injury than a severe shaking up.
