AN EXCITING RUNAWAY ON CEDAR AVENUE.

A Horse Owned by William Hankins Was Frightened by Some Boys and Dashed Along for Several Blocks, Causing a Deal of Damage—Officers Nominated by the C. M. B. A.—Tonight's Basket Ball Game—Savenger's Social—Other News and Personal Notes.

A horse attached to a milk wagon owned by William Hankins, a South Scranton milk dealer, while standing in front of Matt's cheese store, on Cedar avenue, last evening, shortly after six o'clock, was frightened by a gang of small boys, and dashed up Cedar avenue to Birch street and up Birch street to Pittston avenue, making the turn at the corner of Pittston avenue in first-class style.

The animal continued his career up Pittston avenue, bumping and dancing and rattling of the milk cans and bottles keeping time to the beat of his hoofs on the frozen street. Directly in front of the office of Peter Scholz the horse dashed into that gentleman's dray, which was standing along the curb loaded with Christmas trees, completely upsetting it.

The trees were thrown out and the tongue of the drag knocked to an angle of forty-five degrees, suspending the dray horses off their fore feet. The harness broke out before any damage was done to the horses, but the dray was damaged to the extent of $15.

The runaway milk team were caught immediately after the smash, with the milk wagon badly smashed in front, the wheels broken and boiler smashed. The horses were not hurt. Mr. Hankins' damages amount to about $25.

PORTRAIT WHIST.

Latest Inexpensive Device for Winter-time Parlor Amusement.

From the Chicago Record.
A jolly new game is portrait whist. The requisites for playing it are simple and not at all expensive. Those who wish to arrange such a game have but to hunt among the family relics for cast-aside photographs, choosing always those of the carte de visite size. The more old-fashioned and ludicrous the pictures can be found to appear to modern eyes the better will be the fun.

When fifty-two of them have been secured, or a similar number to form packs of cards for each table, they should be assorted into four sets of thirteen each. The pictures of men are reserved to spouses, those of women to clubs, children to diamonds and babies to hearts. The game is then played in a way similar to whist, the regularity in the following of suits being adhered to strictly. The card representing the plainest individual takes the trick.

Here is the telling part of the game, for who can say with certainty that their card bears the ugliest image? About the ladies the same question arises. The cry becomes, which is the plainest? In the long ago these pictures show that there were many buxom lassies, with, however, a not-propriety-finished-off expression, and they may be played as rivals to limp, sylph-like ones with corkscrew curls. Even the children and babies must vie with each other in ugliness. Disputes and exchanges of opinion, accompanied by bursts of laughter, invariably follow the clanking of the tricks, for as beauty has been said to be in the eyes of the beholder, so it is even with ugliness. Therefore, to keep the game in progress an umpire is appointed for each table, one who in all disputed instances decides to whom the trick must be given.
