CHRISTMAS EXERCISES IN THE SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

Many Pupils Presented with Presents Last Evening by Their Teachers and Friends-Candidates in the Fifth Ward Object to Excessive Charges-Another Parsonage Wedding-St. Brenden's Elect Officers. Fourteenth Ward Democratic Caucus-Other News.

Christmas tree exercises for the pupils of many Sunday schools were held in several churches yesterday afternoon and evening and in every instance the children were supplied with presents. candy, fruit and other good things of the season. The primary pupils of the Simpson Methodist Episcopal church were entertained yesterday atternoon by Rey, and Mrs. J. B. Sweet in a delightful manner. A large tree was erected in the lecture room and was loaded down with pretty things.

Recitations, songs and choruses were given by the little ones and in the general distribution each received a story book, a box of candy or other present. Dr. Sweet acted as Santa Claus and gave the tots a ride on a special trolley car arranged for the occasion. The intermediate and Bible class pupils will be entertained this evening.

Similar exercises were held in the First Welsh Baptist church under the direction of the Sunday school teachers. A Christmas tree was crected in the pulpit enclosure and from it hung toys, candy, etc. An interesting musical and literary programme was rendered, to the delight of a large and appreciative audience.

The usual midnight service was held last night at St. David's Episcopa! church and services will be held at o'clock this morning. The midnight service was a celebration of the Holy Eucharist and began at 12 o'clock. The Sunday school of St. Mark's Lutheran church held their annual Christmas testival last evening. A programme consisting of recitations, dialogues and songs were rendered by the members of the school. The church choir also rendered a number of appropriate an-

The candidates who are aspiring or the Republican nomination for select council in the Fifth ward are complaining at the action of the vigilance committing in requiring them to register and pledge themselves for ertain expenses which are to be inurred in the special primaries scheduled for January 2.

It is claimed that each member vigilance demand $3 each or $35 in all for the twelve members of the committee as payment for their services, and additional expenses for the rental of the election booths, printing pallots and other incidentals.

They further contend that if but one andidate registers he will be put o an expense of over $50 for the privlege of being a candidate for an office to which there is no salary attached, thus placing a price on the nomination.

There is a possibility of some of the aspirants filing nomination papers and running for office independently of the vigilance committee.

FOOD VALUES OF OLIVES.

Discussed in the Year Book of the Department of Agriculture.

Two food products of considerable importance are made from olives, namely, olive oil or salad off and pickled olives. A third product, little known in this country, is the dried olive, much eaten in Greece and some other neighboring countries. All olive oil and pickled olives were formerly imported, most generally from southern Europe. In recent years California has developed olive growing, and the industry has now assumed consider able importance.

The ripe olive fruit is not unlike an oval damson plum in form and size. In color it ranges from various shades of ourple to almost black. It has a sour l and persistent bitter flavor. Samples of many different varieties analyzed varied greatly in size, ranging from less than 100 to over 400 to the pound. the majority, however, ranging from 150 to 250 to the pound. The pit constitutes about 20 per cent of the whole fruit, but here there is also considerable range. Both pulp and pit contain oil. The amount of oil in the pulp in different samples analyzed ranged from 13 to about 88 per cent; that in the pit from 0.86 to 1.52 per cent. Whether used for oil making or for pickling the olive should be carefully gathered. The ripe fruit is used for oil stage when it is best suited for this purpose being a matter which must be learned by experience. The green fruit is also used for pickling and should be gathered when full grown and just before it begins to color and soften. The pickled olives usually found in the American market are made from the green fruit. The pickled ripe olives are also met with and may be recognized by their dark color. The best oil is made by crushing the carefully picked fresh olives. To facilitate the extraction of the oil the olives are often partially dried before crushing. Old-fashioned stone mills are commonly used to crush the fruit, alwith good results. The ground mass is pressed to extract the juice, which contains watery plant juices in adidtion to the oil and more or less pulpy matter. Various devices are used to senarate the oil and to purify it. It is allowing the pulp, etc., to settle, and decanting the clear oil. It generally takes about one month for oil to settle the first time. Three rackings are usually sufficient. The oil thus obtained is almost as bright as can be produced has, besides, the distinctive olive flavor and lacks the greasiness which is characteristic of all filtered oils. At the present time a good and growing demand exists all over the United States for olive products, but the market seems to be poorly organized. Ripe pickles bring 75 cents per gallon market, while good, ripe olives for pickling sell in the orchard for from $20 to $90 per ton. A steady market exists also for standard size green pickles.

HEN FOOD AND EGG FLAVOR.

Agricultural Department Tests Show There's an Intimate Relationship. Housewives who use many eggs and dl who habitually eat them boiled know that there is much difference in he flavor of even those which are un deniably fresh. There is a very general belief that the flavor is influenced by the feed which the hens receive, and that materials possessing strong flavors, like onions, turnips, etc., impart an injurious flavor to the eggs. The truth of this belief was shown by recent experiments at the North Carolina experiment station of the United States department of agricul-

Chopped wild onion tops and bulbs were fed to hens and the length of time before there was a change in the flavor of the eggs was noted, as well as the length of time which must clapse after onion feeding was discon tinued before the objectionable flavor would disappear. At the beginning of the trial a half ounce of chopped onion tops per head daily was fed to twelve hens of different breeds. Repeated tests did not show any onion flavor in the eggs until the fifteenth day, when it was distinctly noticeable. amount of onion fed was doubled for four days and then discontinued. The eggs laid while the larger amount of onion was fed were so strongly flavored that they could not be used. After discontinuing the feeding of onlong the flavor became less noticeable and in a week the eggs were of norma tlayor. The main points brought ou making and for pickling, the exact by the tests were the following: Flavor can be fed into eggs. There fore it appears to insure finely flavore: eggs it is necessary to restrict so that no considerable amount of food which will produce badly flavored eggs car be obtained. Some years ago the New York Cornell station, in studying the effect of nitrogenous against carbonaceous food for poultry, reported observations on the effect of the different rations on the flavor of eggs. One lot of fowls was fed a mixture of wheat shorts cotton seed meal and skim milk: an other lot cracked corn and corn dough. The former ration contained much more nitrogen than the latter. The though bronze crushers are being tried hens fed corn laid fewer eggs than those fed the nitrogenous ration, but the eggs were larger. The eggs produced by the nitrogenous ration were of a disagreeable flavor and smell, had a small yoke and did not keep well. The flesh of the poultry fed this said that the best oil is obtained by ration, however, was darker, more succulent and tender than that of the These experiments also show the fowls fed the carponaceous ration. the food has a marked effect on the flavor of eggs. The general experience of poultry raisers is that nitroby the most effective filtration, and it senous rations are more profitable to feed since they produce a larger number of eggs. In view of the fact that such a ration, if too rich in nitrogen may produce eggs of unpleasant flavor it would seem advisable to note the effect of any ration fed upon flavor and modify it if the eggs are found to be inferior in this respect.

SUBSTITUTES FOR COFFEE. Comment in the Year Book of the Department of Agriculture. Coffee substitutes of domestic manufacture have long been known. infusion of parched corn, or corn cof-fee, has met with some favor in the household as a drink for invalids. Parched wheat, peas, beaus and corncobs, as well as sweet potatoes, cu into small pieces and dried and parched have also been used. Such drinks are usually resorted to in times of scarcity or when, for one reason or another, it is not possible to obtain true coffee Chicory is also a well-known substitute for coffee, although it is generally used mixed in larger or smaller proportion with true coffee, and by many such mixtures are preferred to coffee alone, as the chicory is thought to improve the flavor.

There has recently appeared a considerable number of coffee substitutes on the market which generally claim to be made from cereals. In most cases the claim is also made that such beverages are especially wholesome, and in some cases that they have a high food value. The value as food
