-Colored citizens in several southern cities celebrated New Year's day by reading Lincoln's emancipation proclamation. This is about all that is left for the colored man of the south today to remind him that he is little better than a slave.

The Governor's Cure for Strikes.

FAR the most interesting portion of the governor's message is his suggestion of a remedy for strikes. It embodies a practical step toward definite results in arbitration.

Briefly stated, when a strike occurs in any mine, mill, factory or shop involving a sufficient number of men to constitute a menace to public peace and order, the governor asks to be clothed with authority to order troops to the scene for the protection of men desiring to work, if within three days the strikers do not appoint three arbitrators. Then, if within the three following days the operators of the industry shall not also designate three arbitrators the mine or factory inspector, using the police power of the state, shall suspend all operation in the plant until the operator is willing to name arbitrators. When each party to the controversy shall have named an equal number of arbitrators the fact shall be brought to the attention of the president judge of the county in which the strike is located and he shall forthwith name one or three additional arbitrators, to be men disinterested and impartial, the court of arbitration as thus constituted to proceed at once to take testimony, summon persons and papers and arrive at a decision within ten days, such decision to be binding and final.

This plan of procedure represents a policy somewhere between the inefficient schemes of voluntary arbitration common in many states, and the demand for sweeping compulsion frequently heard in public discussion. It interest in offset but not in letter. Appointment of arbitrators is voluntary on both sides, but if either refuses to submit its case to orderly adjudication, it lays itself liable to such temporary regulation by police power as may be considered necessary to the preservation of public order. The governor's suggestion is meant to invite public discussion and amendment. It deserves study.

There is one consolation for the poor hoy these days. He is in no danger of being kidnapped.

The Street Cleaning Nuisance. Y THE way, who is responsible for the state of affairs that allows the street sweepers of Scranton to fill the eyes, ears and nostrils of passing pedestrians with germ-infected dust and pulverized manure almost the specifications governing the al-daily? What are the rules? What are leged street cleaning of this city of the second class? Who knows? It seems about time that some one made an effort to regulate this nuisance, which is a disgrace to a city of any class. In certain municipalities of this great commonwealth street cleaning contracts contain specifications which in clude the following:

the dust to rise they shall first be sprinkled, and the sprinkling shall be so done that the dust will not rise while sweeping nor be turned into mud,

In the interest of good health and common decency why cannot the street cleaning operations of the electric city be also governed by regulations of this character? The city is paying for water, and the application of a few barrels to the block even from the mouth of a gallon garden sprinkler would at times prove a blessing. By all means let the efforts of the hickory brush brigade be tempered with moisture. It is not necessary that they should be constantly obscured in clouds of dust in order to demonstrate that their salaries are being earned. Abate the nulsance!

Many esteemed contemporaries are disposed to regard the Danish West Indies in the light of a territorial gold brick.

Peace in the Philippines.

HERE is no question that the gloom now apreading over the anti-imperialist camp is to be perpetual so far as in the Philippines are concerned. The latest intelligence from a reliable correspondent is to the effect that the new year finds the Philippines nearer a state of peace prosperous. Favorable reports come bers of insurgents are being taken prisoners whose "wholesale retention is the severest kind of a blow to the insurgent cause, eliminating hero wor- which it has options between Fort Lee

The capture of so many prisoners is undoubtedly due to the spreading influence of the elections and General MacArthur's proclamation," and "undoubtedly the bottom of the insurrection is dropping out." Finally, what could be more disheartening to a sanguine anti-imperialist than this general view of the situation: "The residents, experiencing relief from insurgent terrorism and reaping the benefits of American institutions, are now refusing to make their customary contributions to the rebels. The Manila leaders and backers of the insurrection are beginning to feel the fustice and realize the honest intentions of the Philippine commission, and are deserting the sinking cause. The new federal party is enrolling the brainlest and most loyal Filipinos, including a large number of ex-civil officials and ex-military officers. The prospects are bright for a healthy combination of old factions working in behalf of peace."

From all indications the bill imposing tax on eleomargarine of a magnitude calculated to kill the business, has a thorny path before it in the senate. This measure passed the house with comparative little difficulty, but its opponents are finding the imited membership of the senate much more accessible to argument against it. As the remainder of the session, after the holiday recess, will be crowded with important appropriation bills, skilful tactics may avail to keep the oleo act from coming to a vote, and thus the determination of the matter will be postponed for another year. The stubborn fight that in being made is pretty good evidence that the inquetry of palming off this product as real butter has attained highly profitable proportions.

Revival of Dreyfus Excitement.

N SPITE of the justifiable dread with which France regards a return of the Dreyfus excitement, says the Chicago Record, it appears eminently probable that the affair will be reopened and that there will be another distressing wrangle, with all the political perils which such a condition involves. Henri Rochefort having declared through the Paris journal L'Intransigeant that Dreyfus sent the German emperor a document stolen from the German embassy in Paris, the captain lifts up his voice to demand another inquiry. At the same time Zola comes forward to repeat his own charges against the anti-Dreyfus officials, and the squabbling over the question of amnesty has brought to light some unpleasant details of the bargaining by which the government sought to give Dreyfus his freedom and yet make a peaceful compromise with his persecutors.

It is but natural that the unfortunate man who underwent a living death at Devil's Isle should want all stigma taken from his name-that he should wish to be exonerated as well as liberated. Where the peace of the nation is so much at stake, however, It is a question whether Captain Dreyfus would not be pursuing a more patriotic course by completing his sacrifice and waiting for time to reveal the truth and supply final redress of his wrongs. The present ministry in various recent crises has shown itself the grayest difficulties to contend with. In the event of a reopening of the Dreyfus affair, with the outburst of passion which it inevitably must invoke among the military and aristocratic factions of French political life, there is no telling what might happen. It is difficult for an outsider to appreciate the strength of the feeling which stirs Frenchmen in this affair, and which when aroused may imperil the ministry and even the republic.

A revival of the Dreyfus controversy at the present time might provoke a crisis not limited by any means to the internal affairs of France. Were the military elements in French politics to secure the upper hand, the restraint which Loubet has exercised over French chauvinism would be gone. With men like General Mercier -who recently declared in public that he had a perfect plan for invading England-dictating as to the national policies, the relations between England and France would assume at once a much more threatening character. On the whole, the return of the Dreyfus excitement is an event which the world cannot contemplate with com-

Colone! Mills thinks that it would be impossible to stop hazing at West Point. In view of the colonel's attitude upon the subject during the Booz investigation, it is probable that the public will also agree that hazing will continue-so long as Colonel Mills is at the head of the institution,

The Palisades Saved.

the famous Palisades of the Hudson are to be saved from the army of thrifty vandals that has been at the work of demolition for the past five or six years. Although irreparable injury has already been done to a landscape that should have been preserved for all time, much of the former grandeur still remains. An arrangement has been effected by the special commissioners of New York and New Jersey with all parties concerned to stop blasting till next June, and never to resume it if the plan devised by the commissioners can be carried out. The New York Evening Post is authority for the statement that the $5,000 appropriated by the New Jersey legislature was devoted to the expenses of surveys, title searches, and the like, while the $10,-000 from the state treasury of New York has been paid down to bind a bargain by which all the quarry properties will be sold for $132,500. The Evening Post further states that certhan at any time heretofore. Central tain men in New York city have Luzon is practically subdued, the agreed to privately contribute $122,500, roads are open, and the inhabitants the balance of the purchase price of these properties, provided the legisfrom other sections also. Great num- latures of New York and New Jersey will this winter appropriate enough money to enable the joint commission to acquire all the other property on base of the Palisades. It is probable that a magnificent interstate park will be the result of the long-deferred concert of action on this matter.

It is not altogether creditable to the public spirit of the metropolis that the devastation of the Palisades went on inchecked year after year. After the blasting had continued for many months an appeal was made to congress to buy the Palisades for a national park. Of course, it falled. And then began a period of dilly-dallying, during which time dynamite tore out huge masses of the majestic natural wall. Finally the legislatures of New York and New Jersey were induced to appoint a joint commission to see what could be done to put an end to the blasting. That step, which should have been taken long ago, seems to have been successful. The sad spectacle of a Palisadeless Hudson is not likely to be witnessed.

The neighbor of the man whose son has been presented with a toy rifle now rejoices that Christmas comes but once a year.

Naval Reserve Bill.

HE INTRODUCTION into congress of a bill to provide for the establishment of a naval reserve, under national auspices, seems to be a step in the right direction. The bill has been drafted in accordance with plans prepared by a board consisting of Admiral Dewey, Rear Admiral Crowninshield and Captain Evans. These men are thoroughly qualified to understand the needs of the navy, and their recommendations should have the highest weight. It is obvious that the growth of our navy and the acquisition of our great island territory must create a demand for a largely increased number of experienced sailors. While the state naval reserves have done good work, yet their numbers are far from sufficient, and defects have existed which would be obviated by at least a limited national control. There is far more technical experience required to make a thoroughly efficient sailor than a soldier, and this is a sufficient reason why special government aid should be extended to the naval reserve. With such control there s likely to be an improvement in the really effective membership of the reserve and a greater exclusion from it of the class which has only sought it for accial reasons.

THE MONOPOLY which Watt, the inventor of the modern condensing steam engine, had on his patent granted in 1769, expired with the eighteenth century, and rapid improve-cuts were made by other geniuses working or the Watt engine foundation. Watt was now in his sixty-fifth year. On the expiring of the act by which the patent of 1769 had been extended be gave up his share in the business of engine building to his sons. He frowned on the rapid advances in steam construction now hinted at and the suggestion to utilize steam for railway carriages met with no encouragement from him, It is even said that he put a clause in the lease pretext be allowed to approach it. Not satis-fied with the fame be had won and the fortune he had made out of his discovery, Watt was too envious to want the slightest improvements on his rather crude engines.

The year since 1885, when the Tribune first began the collection of statistics, and it was hoped that the new century would dawn upon new conditions. This hope has been somewhat rudely dis-pelled by the report for 1900. The number of lynchings has increased again from 107 to 115 and the details present the old, old story. The south has been the scene of 105 of these lynch ings, the north of eight. Of the 115 victims 107 have been negroes. The most frequent of the crimes alleged to have been committed by them are murder and criminal assault, thirtynine of the former and eighteen of the latter southern states in which lynchings have been most frequent are as follows: Louisian and Mississippi, 20 each: Georgia, 16; Florida, 9 Alabama, 8; Tennessee, 7; Arkunsas and Virginia each.
