Transfers to Be Continued.

THE ANNOUNCEMENT which appears in another column today to the effect that "no further notice" the transfer system that has been in use on the Scranton Traction Company's lines will be continued, looks like a step in the right direction.

Our Position Towards China.

THE refusal of some of the European Powers to consent to the removal of the Chinese negotiations from Peking to Washington and the consequent withdrawal of this government's suggestion should not, says the New York Tribune, be regarded as indicative of ill will among the nations.

The American Horse.

NOTWITHSTANDING the progress in steam and electricity in furnishing means of transit calculated to take away to a certain extent the occupation of the noblest of the quadrupeds, the value of the horse seems to increase rather than diminish as the march of time continues.

THE WORLD ONE HUNDRED YEARS AGO TODAY.

FREDERICK WILLIAM III. was king of Prussia, having ascended the throne four years before at the age of twenty-five. Carefully trained under the supervision, in early youth, of his grand uncle, Frederick the Great, his big ideas were expected of him, but his people were doomed to disappointment. He had neither the energy nor the insight that his position demanded; neither the iron will nor ability of his illustrious relative to adhere closely to the policy of timid neutrality and content to let Prussia slip back into the position of a second-rate state. He received his first blow from the treaty of Luneville, by which he was forced to concede to Napoleon his territory on the left bank of the Rhine, but it did not arouse him. Not even the high-handed occupation of Hanover, the property of Prussia's ally, England, two years later, affected him. Finally the confederacy of the Rhine filled him with alarm and he demanded the withdrawal of all French troops from German soil. The result was four battles and the treaty of Tilsit, which deprived him of half his kingdom. Meanwhile he and the queen, Louise, had been obliged to leave Berlin and were unable to return for two years. The close of Frederick William's reign was devoted to undoing evils of previous years.
