MATE.

South American Tea to Be Represented at the Pan-American.

A South American shrub called yerba or yerba, or yerba mate, is destined to attract considerable attention in the near future. From its leaves a tea is infused which possesses the properties of coffee, without the stimulating, to which may be added the sustaining properties usually attributed to coffee. But little known or used, except locally, it is so highly recommended by those who know its value that the United States have been raised as to its ultimate usefulness.

The plant is a small evergreen shrub of the holly family. Yerba is the native name for the places where it is found growing wild along the Paraguay river. Natives have for centuries prepared the tea by gently roasting the green leaves until dry enough to grind to a powder. This is done by preparing a bed by pounding with wooden mallets a patch of ground about six feet in diameter. Around this, a fire is built in a circle, and the leaves placed on the ground within the circle of fire. When dry enough the leaves are pounded to the required fineness in mortars formed by pun-hung logs. The earth which has been rammed hard and smooth. In some sections, a second roasting is done on poles with the fire underneath. In any manner considerable care is necessary in order to develop the aroma in the tea.

Methods of cultivation have been adopted by the Jesuits and the quality of the leaf much improved thereby. Roasting is done in iron pans set by brick work, and the grinding done by machinery. The tea greatly improves the quality of the tea.

The first systematic attempt at cultivation and preparation of the yerba mate on a large scale is now under way. A company has been formed at Montevideo, Paragway, with a capital of $100,000. Progress has been made in an immense business of the proper growing and marketing of mate, as many people think it should hold a place in the markets of the world either as tea or coffee. Others say the mate must be acquired like coffee, as few people like it when making its acquaintance for the first time. However this may be, visitors to the Pan-American Exposition will have an opportunity to sample the product and judge for themselves.

OUR NEW POSSESSIONS.

Their Productions, Needs and Resources Shown at Buffalo.

The United States government is making arrangements properly to represent Cuba, Porto Rico, the Philippines, Hawaii and Alaska at the Pan-American exposition. Most of us have had very little opportunity to study the resources and needs of these places. The exposition will offer the first opportunity to make their acquaintance under very favorable auspices. A building in the course of construction which forms one of the triangular groups arranged by the government. This building is 150 feet square, tastefully decorated in keeping with the general plan of the exposition. The idea of grouping these new possessions by themselves is an effective one and the general public will naturally associate the different possessions as being historically connected.

These possessions broaden our latitude by adding the tropical and semitropical regions. It seems proper now that we should set about their systematic development. Tea, coffee and spices may be grown in these countries in abundance. Coconut copra may be manufactured into oil on the ground where the fruit is grown instead of being shipped to France, as has been the custom for a hundred years. Manila and other fibres may be improved and their cultivation materially extended. The first thing for the sovereign people of the United States to do is to study the question. This may be followed by careful, systematic improvements in the many directions that will be suggested. The Pan-American exposition, by its extensive exhibits, will start the ball rolling. There seems little doubt that the momentum thus gained will be followed up to the advantage of every country in the group.
