FOR RENT-ARLINGTON HOUSE, DUNDAFF street. Inquire of J. B. Faulkner. GEORGE O'LEARY OBNOXIOUS.

He Tried Hard to Make Things Exciting and Succeeded, His Wife Says.

George O'Leary, the famous, is again in trouble. George has a habit, at odd spells when under the influence of liquor, of making things lively for his family and he got at it again on Saturday night. The story is a long one. About two years ago this time O'Leary's house took fire and was destroyed with all his household effects. He immediately stocked another house with a complete set of household requisites and all went well for a time, as he had taken the pledge. Finally, however, he gave way to his craving and after kicking in the door smashed the furniture. From that time on infelicity was the lot of his faithful spouse. A short time ago O'Leary made up his mind he would break-up housekeeping and this he did by breaking part of the furniture and selling balance for cents where it ought to have brought dollars. Mrs. O'Leary went to live with relatives and for a time enjoyed peace. Finally George invaded her new home. He appeared late Friday night and, owing to the extreme cold and lateness of the hour. was told he could come in if he would behave. He promised to be good, but in the morning was up to his old tricks, so he was shown the door and told to vamoose. He went away, but late Saturday afternoon returned and was very boisterous. About this time Special Officer John Addley happened along and O'Leary was taken in tow by him and was allowed to repent in the city bastile over Sunday. Mrs. O'Leary then swore out a warrant for his arrest and he was taken before Alderman R. J. Delevan, of the Sixth ward. There being sufficient evidence to satisfy his honor of the man's guilt, O'Leary was told he would have to furnish $300 ball. Being unable to do this at the time, he was again taken to William Killeen's winter home, but yesterday afternoon the prisoner succeeded in getting a bondsman and was

A Returned Soldier's Welcome.

The following from the Cornwall Ga- the merchants here very coy. zette, England, will show how the English people welcome home their soldier boys. The Mr. Solomon of this article is a nephew of Mrs. W. Williams, of No. 4:

"St, Mellion, on Thursday night, gave right hearty welcome to Mr. William Solomon, an esteemed resident of the village. Young Mr. Solomon was in South Africa when President Kruger issued his impudent ultimatum.and he was one of the last Englishmen to leave Johannesburg. Reaching Durban, he promptly enlisted in the Imperial infantry, and for five days more than a year he gallantly fought for queen and country in that regiment, and was present at Spion Kop, Pieter's Hill, and Colenso, and other battles. When it was known that he was coming home to spend a holiday with his parents the villagers resolved to show that they appreciated his gallantry. A committee formed to carry out the arrangements were Messrs. J. and C. Nettin, W. Johnson, J. Dunstone, Martin, W. Lucas, R. Stacey, A. Parker, and the Rev. F. T. Wintle, the rector. A private carriage was sent to meet Mr. Solomon on his arrival very large number of horsemen and footmen bearing lighted torches. Headed by Callington band, Mr. Solomon was escorted to the village, and on arriving at the entrance he was taken from the carriage, chaired, and borne shoulder high to his parents' home, a great crowd cheer z enthusiastically. Mr. Martin, on behalf of St. Mellion and the district around, offered the hero of the hour a most hearty welcome, and his words were endorsed by the assembly, which included many from Landrake, Pillaton, St. Dominick, Pentillie, Cargreen, and Plymouth. It is intended to entertain young Soloman at a banquet and to a fund for that purpose Mr. W. Coryton, of Pentillie castle, and Mr. Digby Collins,

It is known that the president regards prompt action in this matter as of very great importance and would not hesitate to call congress togethe in extra session to consider it, should it appear necessary.
