The coffin, the military spectacle and the other attendant features will inspire intense interest and emotion, but what creates greater expectancy is the announcement that Queen Alexandra and the princesses of royal blood will walk down the muddy road and through the narrow streets to the water's edge. This part of the programme thus far holds good, although should rain be falling when the procession starts from Osborne House the royal ladies will scarcely persist in their determination.

At Osborne this evening all is oulet. Furing the day the royal personages walked about the grounds and passed the hours in much the same way as they had done for a week or more. Two solitary policemen guarded the lodge gates. Down the road to the sound carpenters are disturbing the quiet hedge rows by the hasty erection of a few stands, and in Cowes and East Cowes there is the same noise. But windows and seats in stands that would sell in London for fifty guineas each are going here at half a guinea.

Feople throughout the countryside are lamenting tomorrow's sorrow, for fored with it will go the remains of one show they had grown to look upon as peculiarly their own, as well as the prestige her constant visits bestowed upon the locality. Meanwhile the invader, the excursionist, the journalist and the visitor from the continent or the mainland discusses without ceasing the best coign of vantage to view tomorrow's spectacle for spectacle rather than any other reason.
