PERISHED AMID FLAMES

AGED BRIDGET BRYDEN SUFFOCATED IN A BURNING HOUSE.

She Had Been Led to a Place of Safety, but Rushed Back Into the Building—The Walls Fell on Her. Her Body Discovered as Soon as the Smoke Had Lifted—Death Probably Painless.

Miss Bridget Bryden, a maiden lady of over 60 years of age, housekeeper for John Brown, of 91 Brooklyn street, on the West Side, was the victim of a fire that broke out yesterday afternoon...

At about 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon, Miss Annie A. Flannery, who lives near 2001 St. No. 55, glanced out of the kitchen window of her home and saw fire tongues of flame licking up the woodwork at No. 91, not more than twenty feet away...

Miss Nellie instantly perceived that the blaze was beyond their united efforts and she persuaded the old lady and Mr. Brown's youngest child, Florence, to leave the house. They were escorted out into the open air and started for Miss Flannery's home...

As soon as her back was turned, Miss Bryden rushed back into the burning house, and she was seen to be struggling with the flames...

The fire, which was caused by a stove-pipe from the kitchen stove led to the brick chimney and it is said that this was the only stove in the house...
