AN INTERESTING ADDRESS BY PROF. SILAS S. NEFF.

President of Neff College, of Philadelphia, Last Night Addressed a Large Audience at the Auditorium on the "Hopes of Youth"-Cast of Characters and Programme for Tonight's Cantata at the Auditorium. Other News Gatherings and Personal Gossip.

President Silas S. Neff, of the Neff ollege of Philadelphia, is in North Scranton this week to make addresses on educational matters at the North Main Avenue Baptist church, Last night he spoke at the Auditorium on "The Hopes of Youth," and to-night he will speak on "The Core of Education.' Last night there was a large attendance at his lecture, and Dr. Neff, who is one of the leading educators of the state, proved also a man of culture and splendid personality. His address was filled with helpful suggestions and inspiration. In the course of his address he said

The hopes of youth are the promises of the future, the followers of prophecy from the bunan minds. All young minds are luxuriant iopes. It is the hope of youth that constitutes re than anything else the meritorious fascination and effervescent happiness of the springtime of life. Young people almost live in their screen and when man ceases so to live he ceases be young. Not only is this true, but al healthy young people expect to be, do or possess, something great in life and it was doubtless he intention of God that all young people should ctually accomplish something great. And he as made it possible for all to realize the

All minds have the power to conceive greaexpectations, but only a comparatively few ever neet their expectations. This death of their perhaps the saddest of all human experiences, it the human minds is the most possible of all burial grounds. Over its gateway is its name, "The Cemetery of Its Hopes." Why is this? Why this endless longing, this endless strongle and this never ending tuneral procession? Why annot we bring to pass those great things all of us look forward to? To answer this we must first reply to a more fundamental question: What is that which enables man to accomplish anything? What is a greater worker of the world? Of course, there is but one reply: The aumån mind is a great wonder worker of the

It is with the mind as with the machine The greater the mind the greater the accomplishment. The bud drops from the trees and eats no fruit, for the tree cannot supply sufficient nourishment. Hopes die unrealized be-cause the mind has not the power to perform what the hopes require. Many people have a ather mystical view regarding the doing of the world's work, they seem to think things get done accidentally. On the second thought we all know that back of every effect there must be a cause equal to the production of the effect. Back of every great deed there is a great mind. Great minds only can do great things. Small minds only can do small things. It is an interesting and, to those not specialists in mind study, a mysterious fact that while only great minds can do great things, all minds, great and small, can hope for better things. Is there, then, no consolation for the average man? Not a particle. The average man will forever do only average things. But the average man may become the extraordinary man. God placed man and nature here in an uncomplete condition. Our work in the world is to improve nature and ourselves, For centuries man accepted nature as it came from God. There was little progress, man lived on what the ground naturally produced, man formerly barely existed on bundreds o of ground, now, by improving the soil, men get rich on a few acres.

If you realize the extent to which man has suproved on God's work in nature, compare the world five hundred years ago with today. Every school boy knows the facts. Where is the wise farmer who would not be satisfied with the ground that God made, with horses, cows, sheep, apples, berries, etc.: You will occasionally meet a man who is scenningly satisfied. Now we are improving everything. We are intensely engaged improving everything. in working raw nature up into fine art nature and yet the graves of the hopes are much too numerous on the hillside of the minds.

The keynote of the nineteenth century has been a complete God's work in nature of the twentiet century. We will add to this complete God's work of human nature man's mind, yet in the little attention to working busily up into a fit ished product. He has developed everything but himself. We have an education which consists mainly of instruction, but instruction is only slightly development and sometimes results in no development. All advanced educators are now giving their highest thoughts not merely to the problem of how to best instruct the mind, but how to give the boy a better and greater mind. How to properly combine those two phases of education is the great problem. Human development is vastly more important than mere instruction. To of the hopes are very numerous in the mind of the man who merely knows facts. The human development will depopulate this countery
