Rev. G. Bartow Stone, a member of the faculty of Grant university, at Athens, Tenn., and a former member of the Wyoming conference, occupied the pulpit at the Methodist Episcopal church yesterday morning. He delivered a very able discourse, taking his text from Job xxvi; 14, "So these are parts of his ways, but how little a portion is heard of him." He spoke in part as follows:

to the other, trying to find a comfortable position. There was also a kidney weakness that was very atmoying and distressing at times. I was in such misery that I was unable to do my work about the house, and, in fact, I was completely used up. I resorted to the services of a doctor and Le did me good, but I was far from being a well woman. A lady friend recommended Doan's Kidney Pills to me so highly that I got them at Matthews Bros.' drug store. The first box did me so much good that I continued the treatment and took six boxes altogether. I received more relief from this remedy Job's friend asks: "Canst thou find out the Almighty unto perfection?" And the pealmist de-clares of God's works; "They cannot be reck-oned up in order unto thee; if I would declare and speak of them they are more than can be numbered." So, after study and contemplation of God's works we may well exclaim, "Who is o great a god as our God? Thou art the God that doesn wonders."

We seek to know God by the works of nature. We study the plant and animal life as revealed by the microscope. While "the heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth His bandiwork," more of God is revealed to us in our conscience and consciousness than in nature. "The natural may receive h not the things of the Spirit," but the awakened spiritual being sees God, not alone in His power and might, but in His infinite mercy and loving kindness. When we commune with our own hearts, we see and hear more of God. Joseph Cooke, just deceased, said: "In nature we see God as by starlight; through our own conscience He is seen by moonlight; while through revelation in His word He is seen in full sunlight." So, in God's word we see more and Jerome Wade and daughters, Elizabeth and hear more of Him than through conscience. the hard rapping of the foreman re storing order Many of the large eigar factories, where from a hundred to several hundred men, women and girls are employed in the making of cigars, find that if some light amusement is provided for the occupation of their minds while they whirl tobacco leaves into shape twice and three times as much work is performed as if they were let This fact is well known to manufacturers of the character of the Best & Russell company, the Berrimans, Crennan, Moos, Vailens and othrs. The workers left to sit in silence while they care for filler, wrapper and final perfectness of cigar shape grow indolent, careless, slow, and their daily returns of cigars manufactured show it. Hence the introduction of a "reador music, or a music box. workers are instantly cheered up, their fingers move faster, they have occupation for both body and mind, and the gain is not alone their own, but that of their employer.

This idea of entertaining the hands engaged in cigar manufacturing is not new one in Chicago. Spain knew it cars ago, and Cuba has practiced for years and years. manufacturers of Spain having large plantations of tobacco in various parts of the world hire full orchestras to play for their workpeople at times when it is particularly necessary to get out large orders. Several of the largest manufacturing firms in Havana today, firms which supply the Chicago trade, have orchestras regularly engaged or "readers" who take the best bits of Spanish literature and in not unmusical tones read them off to their comrades. These "readers" are almost invariably chosen from out of the ranks of the workpeople themselves. The scene in some of the great Chicago establishments when a reader like Gust is presenting a particularly lively bit of literature is worth witness ing. Take for instance Gust's presentation of "Uncle Remus and the Tar-Again the babble of girls' voices and Baby." He was at this a short time ago when the eigarmakers, the strippers, the packers and all the others concerned in producing a cigar were crowded with the hurry of getting out

5,000,000 eigars in one order. Gust by orders left his bench and sat himself upon a table with his lega crossed, his coat and vest off, and himself ready for a reading. Because everyone was under great tension he selected something humorous, something that would ease the fingers and make the mind brighter. When he opened his mouth there was no sound in the room but the slight rustling of obacco leaves or the low cough of a

Gust or Gustave Hornberg is a German cigarmaker with a sonorous voice and quite a knowledge of general literature. The firm he works for provide such books as he calls for and he reads whenever it is necessary. His readings do not diminish his pay. It remains the same as if he were at his bench making cigars. Hornberg disclaims much of the praise put upon him by his associates for his excellent readings.

"I only give them," he says, "what will interest. In Germany in any kind of work where many people are together some one reads or sings. It is just like fishermen in a boat coming home. If some one starts a song it is easier to row and better time is made. They give soldiers music for the same
