PITTSTON.

Special to the Secucion Tribune.

Pittson, July 7 .- A slight mishap delayed the milk train at the Water street station of the Lehigh Valley about half an hour at noon today. The train consisted of twenty milk and two passenger cars, and just as the train was leaving the depot the drawhead on the second car pulled Pitiston barbera will go to Carbon dale Monday afternoon, when they will meet their brethren of that city in a base ball ame.

The fire alarm system of West Pittson was thrown out of service today by the falling of one of the pole wires. The S and S. Beef company has purchased the piece of property on Cron street, adjoining its Pittston branch. The lot is 25x60 feet in size and is now occupied by the blacksmith shop of P. L. Loeb. The latter some time ago purchased the vacant lot just south of the present location of his building and will move his shop. The beef company intends adding a provisional department to their branch here and for that purpose will erect a two-story addition of brick.

About a mile below the city this morning about 9 o'clock a car of machinery in the center of a west-bound freight, took fire from a spark from the engine. The burning car was quickly uncoupled and hurriedly brought to this city, where the fire was extinguished by the hose companies. The car was a flat one and the machinery was covered with a heavy canvas. The canvas was burned off and the woodwork of the macinery and car slightly charred.

The excursion committee of the Broad Street Methodist Episcopal, the Methodist Protestant and the Congregational Sunday schools of this city, and the Primitive Methodist school of Avoca, will meet at Avoca Tuesday evening at 8.15, to complete arrangements for the excursion to be run to Mountain Park July 26.

Some time ago, Toubill's foundry, of this place, received a large consign-ment of old cannon shells, relics of the Civil war. Many of them were still loaded and were stored in a shed near the foundry, awaiting the arrival of government expert to unload them. Friday night, mischievous young men who had not yet finished celebrating the Fourth, stole one of the shells, took it to the river bank, attached a fuse and set it off. There followed a terrific report and grape-shot fairly rained on the streets in the vicinity. Two young men who were passing along Main street at the time, had a narrow escape, a piece of the shell striking the ground a few feet in James Oizaki, an Italian, who was employed as a street sweeper in Wilkes-Barre, lies in a dying condition at the Pittston hospital, having been terribly beaten and robbed of $200 near Avoca last night. Olzaki was in Avoca last evening and displayed his money too freely. Some one who had evidently seen his wad of bills, lured him away and relieved him of it. This morning his body was found in the woods back of that borough, almost dead. His head had been badly lacerated, and he was bleeding profusely at the ears. The hospital officials say the injuries will doubtless result fatally.

The band pagoda on court hous square was considerably damaged by some of the small boys on July 4, in an effort to blow it up with giant fire crackers. The boys, on being questioned as to why it was done, stated that two or three of the citizens of that vicinity had furnished them money and requested them to go ahead and demolish the structure. The building was erected several years ago by pri vate subscription at a cost of about $300, and the persons who built it are somewhat exercised to think that any one should wish to encourage acts of wanton destruction on the part of the boys. On the other hand, the people who live on the square complain that it is frequented almost nightly by boys and young men, who indulge in reckless and rowdyish conduct and use profane language, to the scandal of the neighborhood, and that it has long been a nuisance to people living there. #### HEAT IN THE PHILIPPINES. An Episode of a March in the Province of Cavite.

I once read a moving description of thirst in the Soudan, says Oscar K. Davis in Everybody's Magazine. The man who wrote it said that thirst such as he had endured there was a good thing, because it made so very good indeed the long, fizzy drinks that he got when the drouth was ended. Sometimes in the Philippines nothing fizzed but the blood, and you felt that bubbling and steaming within you.

In Cavite there is a long, high ridge with no streams and no wells. peace times an irrigating ditch waters it, but war had dried it up, marched before daybreak. B By 10 o'clock the sun had been shining for a million years straight into the brain of every man in the column. The tall heat-withered grass, the yellow, dead rice in the abandoned fields, the faded ads of heat devils in their fantastic dance. The still air seemed alive with them. The earth quivered. I saw s man throw out his hands and pitch forward on his face. Somebody tried to shift him into a comfortable position, but when he was lifted up he was dead. Men fell out by scores. even the excitement of the fight could keep them up. They lay where they fell, nor cared that the advance of the column would leave them in the hands of any enemy that might come back over the line of march. Those who camped at nightfall were scarcely more than half of all who started,

The increase in commerce between Porto Rico and the United States which has followed the Porto Rican act, by which 85 per cent, of the ariff between Perro Rico and the United States was removed, has been very great, especially in exports from the United States to Porto Rice he act went into effect May 1, 1900, and the figures for the month of April, 1901, therefore, onclude the first year of commerce between In that year the imports from Porto Rico intellige United States were $3,827,413, against $2,218. in the corresponding twelve months of 1899 1900, and $2,151,775 in the corresponding twelve months of 1897-98, an increase of over 75 per conas compared with the twelve months ending April 30, 1898, when the island was under Spanish control. In exports from the United States to Porto Rico the increase is still more strongly marked, the experts to that island during t est year under the Porto Rivan act being $7,199. 031, against $3,719,940 in the corresponding twelve menths ending with April 1900, and $1.856,627 in the corresponding twelve months ending with April, 1598, an increase of nearly 200 per cent. To sum up the developments of trade between Porto Rico and the United States since the Porto Rican act abolishing 85 per cent. of the tariff rates between that island and the inited States went into effect, as compared with conditions before the beginning of the war with Spain, it may be said that imports from Porto Rico have increased nearly 75 per cent., and experts to that island have increased nearly 200 per ent. How far the abolition of the remaining 15 pe cent, of the Dingley tariff rates and the cetablish-ment of absolute free trade between Porto Rico and the United States will further stimulate the the United States can only be determined by turne developments. The latest figures of the areau of statistics show that about 80 per cent of the imports of Porto Rico are now from the United States and about 75 per cent. of the ex ports from that island are to the United States,

The following tables show the exports the United States to, and imports into the United States from Porto Rico in the first year under the Porto Rican tariff set, compared with the year immediately preceding when the island was under the United States flag and with the year 1897-8, in which it was under the Spanish flag:

The Story of Sedalia.

THERE WAS calm in the coming of Sedalia. There was balm and healing blessedness. There was the boon of peace. Domestic afof disorder and moved with rhythmic regularity. After feeling upon our necks the stiff reins of many a maidof-all-work we discovered that those Sedalia wielded were silken and that she was gentle on the bit. Indeed, we were apt to get our motaphors mixed when we spoke of Sedalia, for while it was the aspiring young lawyer of the family who reproved the sporting individual for such a phrase, it was the daughter of the house who likened Sedalia to a great rock in a weary land. The pater families jocularly decided that she was good for the preparation of human nature's dally food And comment concerning her was capped by the small boy emphatically asserting that she was all right. So Sedalia adopted us, and we were duly grateful for the honor. To be sure, she had her peculiarities. She couldn't abide a body trackin' up her floor. So few were the feet that trod thereon soon after the sound of her scrubbing brush had ceased. And she resented-as reflecting upon her capability-the anxiety which brought the mistress of the house out into the kitchen before dinner. Her interest in the health of the household became vivid-almost aggressive. One must render account for heavy eyes or fail-ing appetite. The boarder feared to meet her piercing gaze. Much as he relished her waffles, he shrank guiltily from meeting her eye. And yet he was the most harmless of boardersthe most innocent. In regard to women his life was a blank, white page, While he had cared in the course of his fifty years for several women he had never been conceited enough to fancy that any woman could care for him He lived in his office, his books his few old friends. The daughter of the house called him the alliterative artist -not, she sxplained, because he painted portraits in his letsure hours, but because he was proper, peculiar, punctual, punctillious and prepossessing.

But, then, no one paid much attention to what the daughter of the house said. She was at the age when enjoy ment of athletic games sweetened her life, and her perpetual exposition of the aforesaid delights made melancholy the lives of others.

The first day that Sedalia bent her eagle eye upon the bachelor-Mr. Alexander Trimmerth by name-that individual perceptibly winced. He looked up from his delectable breakfast in slightly nervous apprehension.

Sedalia continued to regard him with fudicial gravity. "No-I didn't. But I will-if you don't mind. How's your liver?" Mr. Trimmerth gasped. He hastily

"You-you spoke to me?"

set down his coffee cup. "My-my-" he faltered. My-" "Your liver," repeated Sedalia, "It doesn't seem to me that the whites of your eyes have got a real healthy look.

They are kind of yellow-" That was the time the small boy distinguished-and disgraced-himself. 'If the whites are kind of yellow, Sedalia," he ventured, "why don't you call them the yolks?"

But Sedalia was not to be disconcerted. Although her interest in each and every member of the household was unusual, it was Mr. Trimmerth | which has attracted great attention in whom she was apparently most anxious to keep in perfect health. To tell the truth, he rather resented her solicitude, and as weeks went on this resentment deepened. He spoke of it to the head of the house with something approaching consternation. Why she moved the hot biscuits out of my reach this morning, as though I were a child," he gasped, "Said they were real short-I suppose she meant rich-and said they might bring on another headache." "You have not been having so many headaches lately," he was gently reminded. "N-o! I dare say she's right in the main. But I can't say that I like her everlasting supervision." "She's a capital cook," declared the landlady.

"I'm not denying that. But she's too conscientious. She takes an interest in me because she thinks she ought to. That's the trouble with her-conscientiousness. Now, I'm old enough to take care of myself." He certainly was, as his silvering locks proved, although he did not look within ten years of his actual age. "Do you wish me to speak to Seda-

"Well-it wouldn't hurt. But anyhow, the next time she attempts to give me advice I won't take it.'

This declaration of independence was put to the test the next morning. It was a bleak spring day. Rain had fallen in the night and a raw east wind was blowing. Mr. Trimmerth came down stairs with a new spring ragian on his arm. Sedalia eyed it scornfully "You'd better not wear that," she said. "It isn't but half as heavy as the one you always wear, and this wind is going to do damage. Put on your winter overcoat." Mr. Trimmerth ate his breakfast in stony silence, but there was a resolute glare in his eye. The meal ended, he ostentatiously donned the ragian, and without even buttoning it, went off rebellious and victorious with his head in the air. But that evening came Sedalia's revenge. For the boarder came home with a touch of fever, a headache and a racking pain in his side. By the time the hard siege of pneumonia was over and he was-thanks chiefly to Sedalia-on the convalescent list, he was surprised how pleasant he found it to have the deep-chested and comely young woman around. What a pretty throat she had! How neat she always kept her dark brown hair! And there was a fine look of loyalty in the grayblue Irish eyes. "Sedalia," he asked one day, after a prolonged and thoughtful silence. Why have you never married?"

"May yet," said Sedalia laconically, "Don't think I will, though. I don't like to be taken care of. I'm more used to taking care of people-I am." "So I see," he said dryly. "Was it habit only, then, that induced your interest in me?" He sipped at her excellent broth and watched her narrowly. "You needed more looking after than the others," she explained, "You had no one else." Man's inborn dependence on the ma ternal love of a good woman conquered Mr. Trimmerth. "Sedalia," he begged, "will you take care of me always? Will you marry me?" Sedalia smiledbut she also blushed. "Perhaps," she said, "if you'll promise to wear the coat I tell you to."

THE SULTAN'S APPEARANCE.

George Dorys, a member of the Young Turkish party who has written "The Real Abdul Hamid," a book Europe, describes Abdul Hamid as he looks today, old, feeble, shrivelled, with a face that shows all the workings of evil cunning and abject terror, says Eugene P. Lyle in Everybody's Magazine. He is but 59 years old, but the changes since his ascension to the throne twenty-five years ago are only partly due to time. His jaws are heavy to brutality. The cheek bones bulge as from a death's head. An ugly wiry heard is mottled from dark brown to a rusty red, due to shiftless dveing His emaciated pallor is heightened by the ungainly fez that covers his baldness. The nose is that of a vulture The upper lip, hidden under his mustache, is refined and cruel; the lower, thick and sensual. The eyes, deep in their sockets and half-veiled by shaggy brows, are lighted by a "shifting flame," and strike the beholder with uneasiness, like the eyes of a madman. The Sultan is distressingly thin. He lives by his nerves alone, and this in great part explains the many contradictions in his character. The family strain of insanity taints his blood. He is a nervous monomaniae, of the persecuted-persecutor type. His mania is the fear of death. All his powers of mind are devoted to self-preservation, and they are by now monstrously developed to the choking out of other faculties. He detects peril by instinct, though his diseased imagination swells it out of all proportion. He can judge and use men, and he is an adept manipulator of all the ruses of intrigue and diplomacy.

VALUE OF SEISMOGRAPHY.

In Autralia there are two earthquake observatories, one at Sydney and another at Melbourne. It would have been a great deal of money saved to the colony if she had had a few of Professor Milne's instruments several years ago when the three cables suddenly ceased to work and left her empletely shut off from the world. There had been rumors of war, and when the break occurred the Australians thought some hostile power had cut the cables and would soon swoop down upon the colonies. The governors called out the militia and the naval reserves to patrol the coast, and there was great excitement for nearly three veeks. Business was at a standstill until news came that it was an earthquake, which had lowered the ocean's bottom, making the sea between Java and Australia deeper by many fathoms. The floor of the sea had taken down the callies along with it.-Everyboly's Magazine.
