FUNERAL OF THE DROWNED BOY

DANIEL MEREDITH LAID AT REST YESTERDAY.

Services were held at the home of the deceased's parents on North Bromley avenue. The body was recovered Saturday morning. Services in the various churches yesterday.—Number of cases in Police Court.—James Dean tried to escape.—Other news notes.

Just at the time when the local searching party was about to abandon their work, and the services of professional divers were to be employed, the body of young Daniel Meredith came to the surface of Lake Lodore.

Saturday morning the remains were found by John Davis, James McLaughlin, William Abel, James McLoughlin and David J. Davis, who comprised the searching party. The body was sighted within ten or fifteen feet from the shore, and about twenty-five feet from the place pointed out by Samuel Edington, the boy who was with Meredith when the unfortunate accident occurred. A non-fangled hook, made under the direction of John Davis, of South Bromley avenue, and used systematically by the rescuers, together with the explosion of sticks of dynamite, were undoubtedly the means of bringing the body to the surface.

As soon as the body had been recovered, a message was sent to Mr. Meredith, and in company with funeral Director P. W. Tague, he went to the lake and brought the remains to this city. The body was in such a state of decomposition that it was immediately prepared for burial, and left in the care of the undertaker yesterday afternoon at 2 o'clock, when it was taken in a hearse as far as the house.

The remains were not removed from the hearse until the Washburn street cemetery was reached. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. Thomas de Gruchy, D. D., pastor of the Jackson street Baptist church, and Rev. D. D. Hopkins, pastor of the First Welsh Baptist church. The rail bearers were George Wallace, George Owens, Willie Kay and Walter Huggarty.

The services were attended by many sympathizing friends and relatives, together with many public school and

It was impossible to get any of their names. They are all in the station house awaiting a hearing.

CASE AFTER CASE.

Plenty More Like This in Scranton.

Scores of Scranton people can tell you about Dean's Kidney Pills. Many a happy citizen makes a public statement of his experience. Here is a case of it. What better proof of merit can be had than such endorsement?

Mrs. Emma Shaughnessy, of 1306 Remington avenue, says: "I suffered for five years with pains in my back so severe that at times I could scarcely attend to my household duties. In bed I constantly turned from side to side, trying to find a comfortable position. If I caught cold, the pain in my back and all the way up my shoulders was so severe that I could scarcely stand it. I tried different so-called remedies, but nothing ever did me so much good as Dean's Kidney Pills. I now know where to look for a remedy if a return of the trouble should ever take place."

The school board met in special session Saturday night for the purpose of electing teachers and janitors for the ensuing year, and deciding the matter of an addition to No. 10 building.

Mr. Gibbs stated that it had been estimated roughly that the cost of the proposed structure would be about $2,000. After some debate a motion made by Mr. Costello and seconded by Mr. Flannery, providing for the immediate erection of the building was carried. Bids will be received at once and the award made at the next meeting of the board.

Without debate the old corps of teachers and janitors was re-elected unanimously. Misses Etta Murray, Kathleen Haggerty and Annie McGuire were balloted on for the two new positions to be created by the enlarging of No. 10 building. Misses Haggerty and McGuire each received five votes and Miss Murray two votes.

A number of the old teachers were present, anxiously awaiting the result, as rumors of impending changes had been industriously circulated for some time.

COMING AGE OF GLASS.
The Alluring Dream of a Celebrated French Savant—Everybody Sure to Live Some Day in a Glass House.
From the London Express.
Jules Henrievaux, till lately the director of the great glass manufactory at St. Gobain, predicts that the new age will be the age of glass. Mr. Henrievaux is an enthusiast on glass. He believes it to be a material of the future. He does not pretend that recent work for glass cannons, or glass men-o-war, or glass greyhounds of the ocean, nor does he contemplate the substitution of vitreous machinery for that which we now employ in our various processes of manufacture, but he does claim that the glass is the best substance known to us for every kind of structural purpose; and especially for dwelling houses. In short, if the visions of M. Henrievaux are realized we shall all be living in glass houses before long.

The point of the idea is found in the inexhaustible supply of the materials from which glass is made. In its adaptability to all shapes and forms, its durability, and its cleanliness. With regard to the second point it is obvious that glass can be shaped, colored and decorated to an extent of which no other material is capable, and it is upon this aspect of the idea that M. Henrievaux lavishes his imagination.

There are six ways in which glass can be manipulated. It can be cast into window-panes, paving stones, panels, etc. It can be molded into mirrors, slates, wall-decorations and even statues. It can be blown into bottles, tumblers, vases and all the utensils comprised under the name of "glassware." It can be blown and ground into crystals, lenses, prisms and other object of art and utility. It can be drawn into the finest threads and made into pipes, baskets and dress materials. It can be turned into mosaics and enamels, and can be brought into the closest imitation of most of the precious stones.

Imagine with M. Henrievaux, the construction of a glass house. The foundations and the walls would be constructed of a variety of glass, recently invented, called "stone glass," which has already successfully withstood the severest tests. When crushed it gives a resistance three times as great as granite. When subjected to heat or cold it is found to be less sensitive than steel. When submitted to friction it shows less wear than porphyry. Shock, as of a hammer blow, it resists to a degree twenty-two times as severe as that which would fracture marble. The test of tension has practically no effect on it whatever.

The walls, then, would be built of glass held together by angle iron so as to permit of a hollow space through which pipes could pass (the pipes themselves being glasswork), conveying hot air, hot and cold water, gas, electric wires, drains, and everything needed for the health and comfort of the inhabitants. Stairs and balustrades, ceilings and wall decorations, mantelpieces and fireplaces, would all be constructed of glass. Some of M. Henrievaux's conceptions in the way of decorations, in which the glass is made opaque or tinted with brilliant colors, or made silver and golden, or arranged in prisms and crystals with facets like diamonds, are perhaps too fanciful to be taken seriously, but through them all there runs the same enthusiasm, the same belief that glass, as Thiers once said to Louis Napoleon, is capable of anything.

Our chairs and tables, in the new glass age, will be made of vitrified material, toughened to the strength of oak and mahogany. Our cooking utensils, our plates and cups and saucers will be made of the same substance. Even our knives and forks will have glass handles, if not glass blades.

The new glass house will be absolutely clean and practically indestructible. The whole of its surface can be washed from the top story to the basement without a trace of humidity being left. Dust cannot collect on its polished face, and the spider will find no place on which to hang its cobwebs.

They have already begun to pave the streets of Paris with glass, and it is found that the substance, while practically indestructible, is admirably suited to the feet of both men and beasts; and as it neither holds or makes any dirt, it is as abundantly easy to clean. Its only fault is that it somewhat increases the noise of the traffic, but even this might, by and by, be overcome.

One of the fixtures of last year's exhibition was the Palais Lumineux, or the Palace of Light, built entirely of glass. It was to some extent the realization of M. Henrievaux's ideal. Not only was it of solid construction, but the adaptability of glass to every class of decoration in form and in color, aided by its various degrees of opaqueness and transparency, enabled its builders to raise a structure which as far transcended our own Crystal Palace as a diamond outshines the imitation.

The question of cost has not been left out of account. Glass can be made out of almost anything amenable to the influence of fire. The stone-glass, to which reformers have already been made, is manufactured mainly from what have hitherto been regarded as waste substances. The slag heaped which disfigure our mining and iron districts are all convertible into glass. Evidently the days of brick and slates are numbered.

Perhaps it might be possible, in connection with one of the many projected exhibitions, to construct on a modest but sufficient scale a dwelling of the kind that M. Henrievaux describes. People would then be able to experience the actual sensation of walking along glass floors, or climbing a glass staircase, or being surrounded by glass walls, or sitting on glass chairs at glass tables, drinking tea out of glass cups and stirring it with glass teaspoons.

How far this could be accomplished with due avoidance of monotony it is hard to say. Certainly M. Henrievaux is enthusiastic enough to believe in the fullest development of his idea.
