

WEST SCRANTON

TWO BOLD, BAD LITTLE BOYS

THEY WERE ARRESTED IN E. B. HOUSER'S SHOP.

Forced the Lock in the Door and Gained an Entrance—Officers Took Them to the Station House and They Will Be Given a Hearing This Morning—William Dickson Injured in the Briggs' Mine—Lawn Social at the Home of Miss Edith Jones—Notes and Personals.

Last night about 10:15, the officer stationed at Main avenue and Jackson street was notified that two boys were in E. B. Houser's harness store, on North Main avenue. Upon investigation, it was found that two boys, Dale Shiffer, aged 11, of 311 Tenth street, and Ivor Reese, aged 12, of 145 South Lincoln avenue, respectively had forced the lock on the back door and entered the store. As the gas jet was burning low it was an easy matter for them to get to work.

When Patrolman David Davis, Kiah Peters, Thomas Evans and Constable Thomas Jones appeared on the scene, they found the boys crouched behind the counter. They were immediately arrested and taken to the West Side station house, where three pairs of ladies' shoes, two pocketbooks and a lot of other stuff was found upon their persons. E. B. Houser, the owner of the store, was sent for. The boys will be given a hearing this morning.

A Match Game of Quits.

At John Wagner's hotel, on Hampton street, there occurred yesterday an old-fashioned game of quoits, which gladdened the hearts of many lovers of that sport.

The contest was witnessed by a large crowd, and many star plays were made by those engaged. The players are the finest to be found in the state, and after the game the honors were found to rest with Richard Williams and Daniel O'Brien, both of Taylor, who secured 31 points. Their opponents, John Lewis and John Richards, both of this side, gained 30 points. The match was for a purse of $25, which was given to Williams and O'Brien, the winners.

ing milk yesterday morning back of Colonel Phillips' home, on North Main avenue, when he fell into quite a deep hole, which had been dug some time previous.

Some passersby helped him out, and sent for Dr. Raymond, who found Mr. Buck's injuries to consist of severe cuts on face, neck and hands, also the general shock to his system.

Morning Fire.

At 3:45 o'clock yesterday morning a still alarm was sent in to the Columbia and Franklin, who immediately responded and found the large barn in the rear of R. F. Post's home, 221 Chestnut street, in flames. After a short but fierce battle they succeeded in getting the fire under control, with no damage done to adjoining property.

The barn was owned by G. B. Sampson, of Carbondale, and was used by J. D. Williams & Bro., whose loss amounts to three tons of hay and sixty bushels of oats. The horses and wagons were all taken out in safety by those who arrived on the scene before the fire companies.

Lawn Social.

The lawn social at the home of Miss Edith Jones, of Locust street, was all that could be wished for as a financial success.

The lawn was beautifully decorated with Japanese lanterns, American flags and bunting, and as the various colors were thrown by the lanterns on the pretty dresses of the young women in attendance it made an artistic scene which the public seemed to enjoy, judging by the large crowds which thronged the lawn throughout the evening, liberally purchasing the many good things for sale.

Mine Accident.

William Dickson, 18 years of age, and living at 2112 Price street, a driver at Briggs' mine, was very badly injured yesterday afternoon while at work. In walking along the slope, he stumbled and fell in front of a trip of coal cars. Fortunately, instead of running over him, they threw him to one side.

He was taken to his home in the ambulance, where Dr. J. J. Brennan was called. The doctor found him suffering from the shock and several very bad cuts.

DUNMORE DOINGS.

Damage Done by the Lightning Sunday Night and Yesterday—Fire Alarm Out of Order.

The house of Raffael Papalo, on Spencer street, was struck by lightning during the second shower on Sunday night and badly damaged. Portions of the roof were torn from the fastenings and lifted clear off the house. Fortunately none of the members of the family were sleeping in that part of the structure and no one was injured, but all received a severe shock.

During the storm yesterday afternoon the house of Mrs. Mullen, on Webster avenue, was struck and an alarm of fire was rung in from box 14, to which the Neptune company responded. The bolt struck the chimney and ignited the roof of the wooden work, but the blaze was easily extinguished and the damage done was slight. Mrs. Mullen was in the house at the time, but escaped injury.

As a result of the recent electrical disturbances the fire alarm system is out of order, and in case of fire an alarm could not be rung from any box in town.

ANCIENT ROMAN'S CLOTHES.

Many Fabrics Used and Skill Employed in Arranging Them. From the Scientific American.

At the December meeting of the Archaeological Institute of America Professor Myron K. Sanford, of Middlebury college, read a most interesting paper upon "The Material of the Tunic and Toga," and we extract the following from the Journal of the Institute:

With the passing of the simple toga and tunica of the early years to the more ornate and complicated forms of dress there came to Rome many new fabrics to vie with wool. Many Latin writers tell of the use of linen, cotton, silk and various mixed stuffs. The idea of students gain from the perusal of classical literature is that rarely did the newer materials actually supplant wool in making up the various articles of dress. No student who has undertaken the formidable task of an elaborate study of the existing paintings and statuary representing the Roman dress, to determine how far the artists intended to suggest various materials in their drapery. In some of the portrait statues in Pompeii it is unreasonable to believe that the clumsy, thick folds do not represent some form of wool, and the lighter and sometimes diaphanous folds the finer fabrics. Frequently in painting, and not rarely in sculpture, the folds of the robe are to be seen in the clothing belonging to the same figure. The Latin department at Middlebury college has been interested in experimenting with a considerable variety of materials in imitation of some of the well known figures. Besides coming to certain conclusions regarding the graceful and stiff foldings of different cloths, the students had realized a fact insufficiently emphasized in the manuals, namely, that no material from the heaviest wool to the most delicate silk will of itself take the beautiful folding shown in the ordinary statue or painting. The drapery in the latter is always one of two results; it is either taken from the plaits and foldings of the clothing of the model draped beforehand with the most painstaking care or it is the conventionalizing of the artist. Not until a trial is made will one realize how elaborate the process must have been to produce the appearance of the most delicate silk for the accidental disarrangement of which on the crowded streets he sent a challenge to his friend. Often the simplicity of certain effects is, after all, an elaborate effort. For example, the Commodus of the Vatican collection seems to have the drapery hanging from the body in the most natural manner, while an attempt to imitate it will show that it is a case of art concealing art. The simplicity is only apparent, and occasionally no imitation with material of any sort whatsoever can follow the contours in the drapery of certain classic figures.

WIDOW SELLS BABY BOY.

Is to Get $500 a Year and Boy Is to Be Made a Heir.

Ransomville, N. Y., Dispatch to the Sun.

To insure an adequate income for herself, a good home and kind foster parents for her only child and a generous endowment for him when he attains his majority, a Pittsburgh woman, who declines to make known her identity, has sold and transferred all her rights, title and custody of her two-year-old son to Jacob Schleswing, a wealthy farmer living on the lake road five miles northwest of this village. The assignment was signed, witnessed and delivered at the Schleswing homestead on Thursday of this week, and the child is now in the custody of its foster parents. To a reporter Mr. Schleswing gave the details of the transfer and the incidents leading up to it.

While visiting friends in Pittsburg recently Mr. and Mrs. Schleswing became acquainted with the mother of the boy. The woman is a widow, and up to the present time she has been in rather straitened circumstances. Having no children of their own the Schleswings became much attached to the little boy and invited the mother to visit them at their home near here. The invitation was accepted, and a few days ago the mother and child were met at the railroad station here and were driven to the Schleswing homestead.

A few days after their arrival Mr. Schleswing proposed to the child's mother that he be permitted to adopt the little fellow. The mother objected at first, but when she was assured that the boy would receive a good education and ultimately a large part of the Schleswing estate, she took the matter into consideration. In addition to this the mother was informed that she would receive an annuity of $300 during her lifetime and that she might spend several weeks each year with the child. It was stipulated, however, that the boy should be brought up to be himself if he desires to do so. The mother reserves the right to reclaim her son should Mr. Schleswing neglect to fulfill any part of his agreement.

After the first installment of the annuity was paid to the mother she was informed that she might revoke the agreement if she then desired. She replied that it would be best for the boy to let it stand. She will return to Pittsburg on Monday. The boy's present name is Roy Schleswing.

SOME FIRST SPEECHES.

Parnell Could Only Steammer Out a Few Unintelligible Sentences.

Lord Salisbury was 24 when Lord Robert Cecil, he took his seat in the House of Commons as a member for Stamford, in February, 1854. Two months later on April 7, he delivered his first speech on Lord John Russell's University bill. Harcourt only gives the substance of his narrow column, and the members who immediately followed in the debate made no reference to it; but Gladstone, speaking later in the evening, recognized in generous terms the abilities of the young man who was destined after the lapse of thirty years to become his chief political rival. "The first effort, rich with promise," said he, "indicates that there still issue forth from the maternal bosom of the university men who in the first days of their career give earnest of what they may afterward accomplish for their country."

The most successful maiden speech of recent times was that of Sir William Harcourt. He was 41 years old when he took his seat as member for Oxford on Feb. 16, 1869, and just a week later addressed the House for the first time. The subject was happily one in which he was well versed. Viscount Bury asked for leave to introduce a measure entitled the Vacating of Seats bill, to repeat the statute of Queen Anne which makes it necessary for members of the House to seek re-election on accepting office in the government, on the ground that it served no useful purpose. Mr. Vernon Harcourt (as he was then called) protested against leave being given even to bring such a bill. The speech which occupies six columns in Harcourt's memoirs and was loudly applauded throughout, induced Viscount Bury to withdraw his motion.

Nervousness is not commonly recognized as an Irish failing, but at least three celebrated Irishmen have in this century owned its mastery when up to the first time before the House of Commons. On April 26, 1875, when a Coercion bill for Ireland was in committee, Parnell rose to deliver his first speech. He was obviously and pathetically nervous, and could only stammer out a few barely intelligible sentences about Ireland not being a geographical fragment.

Eighty years ago or so a distinguished Irish member named Dougherty, who subsequently became Chief Justice of Ireland, asked "Canning what he thought of his maiden speech. "The only fault I can find with it," said Canning, "is that you called the speaker sir too often. "My dear friend," said Dougherty, "if you knew the mental state I was in while speaking, you would not wonder if I had called him 'ma'am.' Whitehead, another Irish member, who also became Chief Justice of Ireland, used to relate that when during his maiden speech he saw the Speaker's wig surrounded by blue flames he knew it was time to sit down.

Pretty Good Authority.

One of the occasions when youth was justified in rebuking its elders is cited by "The Green Bag." When the son of a well known judge argued his case before the full bench of a certain state court, one of the members at which were noted for badgering youthful counsel, the chief justice was particularly active and began his questions before the counsel had made a statement of the facts.

When the young advocate came to the law thereof, he was constantly interrupted by comment and inquiry.

"If it please your honor," was the inevitable reply, "I will answer your question later." Finally the chief justice burst forth: "This is a most extraordinary proceeding, Mr. Blank. You say that it is a suit on a judgment recovered in New York. For a moment, I never heard of such a proceeding. What is your authority for bringing such a suit?"

"If it please your honor," was the quiet reply, "I admit, I admit, rather astonishing, and you that his honor has been impugned, being the constitution of the United States, Article 4, Section 1."
