Wards as "The Mountebank." One of the plays in the repertoire of Frederick Watson for this season is "The Mountebank," a translation from the French of the four-act romantic drama of D'Ennery, and it was presented at the Lyceum last night.

It was the second time Mr. Ward and his company have appeared behind the footlights this season, and when Mr. Ward was called before the curtain at the end of the third act last night, he begged the audience to excuse any crudities that might have been noticeable in the production of the play, because of the fact that the company and play had not become thoroughly acquainted.

For a second night, "The Mountebank" moved along smoothly and gracefully, and the rather full audience was intensely aroused to a considerable pitch of enthusiasm.

"The Mountebank" is, however, a play of other days, when theatre-goers liked their drama nicely proportioned as to hero, heroine, villain, etc.

Mr. Ward, clever, conscientious actor that he is, worked like a Trojan, and yet his success last night was only meager.

His daughter, Miss May Ward, is a member of his company, and a graceful, winsome young woman also in her presentation of the character of Mademoiselle Flora was not the least interesting feature of the performance.

One of the most interesting collections of old-time photographs ever gathered is the one which dominates the pages of "Pudd'nhead Wilson's" calendar.

A most wonderful tale is told and when the dramatized version, under the direction of Sponan Brothers, is seen here at the Lyceum on Friday night, William S. Gill is to be seen in the title role of the play.

Miss Amy Lee at Academy. Miss Amy Lee, who will present a repertoire of successful plays at the Lyceum for three nights and two matinees, at popular prices, will this season be seen in Philadelphia, New York, Boston, Providence, Baltimore, Buffalo and Washington, at prices ranging from ten cents to one dollar.

Miss Lee has never before appeared at popular prices, but prefers to play repertoires a week in each city, at popular prices, than to give one-night one-night stands played by the average attraction.

Barney Gilmore. Barney Gilmore's success has created no end of talk in professional circles.
