HOMEOPATHS OF THE STATE

Their Thirtieth Annual Meeting Opened Yesterday Morning in Pittsburgh.

ATTENDANCE IS LARGE

Dr. H. B. Ware, of This City, the State President, Is Chairman of the Convention—His Address to the Members of the Society Was One of the Features of Yesterday's Meeting—Urged His Hearers to Take Greater Interest in the Meetings of Their Society—Paid a Tribute to President McKinley.

By Exclusive Wire from The Associated Press. Pittsburgh, Sept. 24.—Legislation was the keynote of the opening session of the thirty-second annual convention of the Homeopathic Medical Society of Pennsylvania this morning. The subject was brought into prominence by the discussion of the state hospital for insane appropriation and the homeopathic physicians entertain the hope that in the near future the hospital of the profession will have one of the finest institutions for the care of patients with diseased minds in Pennsylvania.

When Dr. Willard was asked for his report as chairman of the legislative committee he requested that he be deferred until tomorrow when Speaker Marshall, of the house of representatives, could be present. It is Mr. Marshall's desire to address the convention upon the bill providing for the establishment of a state hospital for insane. The convention is unusually well attended this year and innumerable scientific features will be discussed in addition to the routine business incident to the organization. The convention is presided over by Dr. H. B. Ware of Scranton, Pa., the state president of the society and the youngest man who has ever filled that office. His address to the delegates this morning was full of sage advice and was listened to with much interest by the members of the society.

Dr. Ware's Address.

In opening his address Dr. Ware said: "We celebrate this year the thirty-fifth anniversary of the organization of this body, and it seems fitting here to ask ourselves the question, Are we satisfied with the past and are we as ready to enter the path of those who have gone before us?" He advised his hearers not to be satisfied altogether with things as they are, but to press on to newer and possibly better things. "If any one has a suggestion to make which seems a good one, let's try it," said the president.

Dr. Ware then passed on to the necessity of having good officers, men who have the interest of the society at heart and are willing to work for it. With reference to the matter of attending the meeting of the medical societies, Dr. Ware said: "I cannot conceive how a physician of any ambition or love for his work can say, 'I have no time to attend medical meetings.' When these opportunities are presented to us and we do not take advantage of them, we are not honest with our patients and, of course, much less so with our seeming self-interest. The meetings are the greatest educator to be had by the practitioner, for it matters not how much he knows, he can always learn something from the experience of others."

Reports on Peculiar Cases.

"Another thing of great value this society should have is the report of practitioners in the report of peculiar cases, which, it seems to me, is not made use of as sufficiently as it should be. The discussion of a certain case may bring out experiences which are invaluable to all. The same thing should follow if a certain remedy or medicinal appliance not generally known or made use of, which has proven to be of special aid in certain cases, should be reported."

After considering several matters of interest only to the members of the society, Dr. Ware continued: "We have had during the past year many things to be thankful for, and some to cloud our spirits. Among the brightest is the work done by the physicians of following strictly the generalship and executive abilities, and I may say possibly the political abilities of the Germantown Medical club in obtaining money from the state for the foundation of the establishment of a state insane asylum, under the homopathic rule. This had been attempted several times before, but failure resulted when the governor began to use his axe. This year, while he seemed to have his axe in hand and eye upon this bill, sufficient was saved from the wreck for us to take heart and full for. Let us all be content with what we have and work to make the institution great and do the work it is intended to do."

Legislative Work.

"I hope hereafter, when there is any legislative work done, this society will take an active interest in it. In the appointment of the legislative committee, I shall endeavor to make it as representative a body of the whole state as possible."

The address closed with this reference to the beautiful life of the late President McKinley: "While overwhelming sadness is in our hearts over the great loss our nation and we individually have suffered in the death of our beloved President McKinley, we must not give ourselves up wholly to sadness and mourning, but emulate his fine character as far as possible, and be men. Do our duty before God and man, and not allow petty strife and cares to control us."

By Exclusive Wire from The Associated Press. Washington, Sept. 24.—The Schley court of inquiry was brought to a halt today, eighteen minutes after it had convened, by the announcement of the sudden death of Judge Jeremiah Wilson, senior counsel for Rear Admiral Schley. The announcement was made to the court by Elder Rayner, assistant counsel for Admiral Schley. He said: "I have a very sad announcement to make to the court. ATTRACTED A BIG CROWD

Miss Beazie Boland's Talk and Actions Places Her in the Hands of the Police.

A little woman, in a tattered and torn skirt and a long, shoddy shawl thrown across her head and shoulders, caused some excitement in the central city for a time last evening. Sergeant DeLoiter abruptly brought an end to her exploits by grasping her by the arm and escorting her to the Central Police station. She was Miss Beazie Boland, Reeling, a foolish-minded woman, who had been indulging in liquor. Miss Boland first attracted attention in the municipal building. Patrolman George Jones, acting as desk sergeant, saw her in the building and called her a woman. He dashed up the back stairs, but when he reached the corridor the woman with the shawl had darted out of the Washington avenue entrance, down Washington avenue she went to Linden street, selling steadily and leaving the crowd that followed her with oaths frightful to hear. Down Linden to Penn. to Spruce, to Washington, to Center street she continued, all the while haranguing the following: "I am a poor woman, I am a poor woman, I am a poor woman. Miss Boland was until three months ago an inmate of the Hillside Home. At that time she stayed away and came to Scranton, where she has been living with her relatives. She was 'clashed among the feeble-minded at the farm.' She will be taken back this morning."

RESTRICTING THE VOTE.

How Negro Disfranchisement Works in Old Mississippi. From the New York Sun. Mississippi adopted the policy of negro disfranchisement in 1890, or five years before South Carolina, eight years before Louisiana and ten years before North Carolina. In the presidential election of 1876, the whole number of votes cast in Mississippi was 184,000. To 1880, under a method of local disfranchisement of colored voters, the total vote of that state fell to 110,000, although the population had been increasing steadily. Four years later the vote was 115,000.

Two years after ward a new constitution, adopted by a majority of the convention which framed it, but without submission to a vote of the people, provided for a registration of all voters, and required every elector to contribute to the registration officers that he was "able to read any section of the constitution of the state, or able to understand the same when read to him, or give a reasonable interpretation thereof." In the presidential election succeeding that, in 1882, the total vote of Mississippi was 52,000, in 1886 it was 59,894, and at the recent November election it was 59,162, of which number Bryan had more than 50,000 and McKinley less than 6,000.

Not All the Time. The Honorable, of Koss township, was in town on Sunday and incidentally told a story about Bill Sawyer, who lives in that community. Bill is a good natured fellow, and has a strong sense of humor in his constitution, but he stammers so that it is almost painful to hear him attempt to say anything. Bill was talking to a woman the other day when he was only slightly stammered, and being somewhat embarrassed he stammered more than usual, whereupon the lady exclaimed: "My goodness, Mr. Sawyer, do you always stammer like that?" "No, no, no," replied Sawyer, "only when I talk."
