INDUSTRIAL AND LABOR

DIG COAL POCKETS TO BE BUILT AT HONESDALE

Delaware and Hudson Company Is to Restore One of the Familiar Sights of the Maple City—Chief of the Bureau of Mines and Mining Roderick Is Making a Tour of the Anthracite Region—Make-up of the D. L. & W. Board for Today.

"The Delaware and Hudson officials have decided to rebuild the high works and pockets back of Honesdale," says the Wayne county Herald.

"To that end the engineers have located the road up Gilles Latches until it connects with the old light track, thence around Horse-shoe bend to the height of old No. 12 plane. About ninety laborers are engaged in grading and laying track, standard gauge, following up Gilles Latches. S. H. Brown and a force of carpenters are engaged in removing the timbers yet remaining above Honesdale, which will be used in connecting with the remaining of the high works and pockets back of Honesdale. The loaded cars will be backed up the new switch back, and the empty cars will be run back to the main track by gravity, which will be a reminder of the old gravity road, and one of the finest sections of it, around Horse-shoe bend. There is a switch just above the bridge at Gilles Latches that follows the old heavy track under the pockets at the foot of the side hill which forms the dumping ground.

"So it will be an easy matter to load the cars at the pockets and switch them on to the main track, and if it were not for that sharp curve around the mountain, they could run the cars directly into the Honesdale yard from the point of loading. Considering the grading that already exists it will be an easy matter to restore the old dumping ground, which will certainly furnish some work to Honesdale men.

"The side hill is so steep that the cars run into the pockets by means of chutes rendering the use of steam shovel unnecessary.

"Honesdale has been famous in years ago for its immense piles of coal, and it is again being noted as one of the richest of having the largest pile of mined coal on earth. There has been 750,000 tons piled here at a time. We shall welcome the glittering black diamonds as they sparkle from our hillsides, reminding us of the great industries that are operated through the agency of local supplies here."

of Mines and Mining, was in Pottsville Wednesday to consult with Mine Inspector Maguire relative to different business matters of that district. He is making one of his periodical trips through the region inspecting the inspectors as he terms it, says the Pottsville Republican. One thing which is receiving his particular attention is the law relating to medical rooms being placed in a convenient place in all of the mines. He is instructing the inspectors as to their duties in this connection. The law was approved May 23, and will go into effect on November 29. The duties of the mine inspectors is set forth by law as follows:

"It shall be the duty of the mine inspector to visit each of the medical rooms in his district at least once in six months; see that the law is complied with; examine records of the medical rooms. He shall notify the country coroner of any neglect of non-compliance with the provisions of this act by any operator, which information shall be regarded as evidence on any inquest that may be held on employees, dying from injuries received while working in such anthracite mines."

This and That.

The Reading Railway company has posted notices that after Sunday they will abandon the station at Mt. Carbon, Schuylkill county. No more trains will stop in that town, because there has been practically no business there for some time. Mt. Carbon, twenty-five years ago, was a prominent railroad center of Schuylkill county.

Prince Yutaku Yamamoto, a Japanese, has become a special apprentice in the shops of the Pennsylvania railroad at Altoona. He will make a thorough study of mechanics, spending a minimum of years with the Pennsylvania mine, all sorts of positions. He started as a laborer in one of the gangs in the evening shops.

The Lackawanna railroad is to adopt the standard code of rules on its main line and branches. The change is to take effect December 15. Fredrick G. Sherman, train dispatcher of Reading, who is an expert on rules, particularly those applying to double and single track roadwork, will instruct the dispatchers. In a few days he will be general superintendent's headquarters in this city, and his work will probably be started here.

"Molly Pitcher."

An obstetrical cannon brought disaster to the last act of "Molly Pitcher" at the Lyceum last night. Molly had won her cannon up to the point in front of the Monmouth court house, had shotted and loaded the gun and fired the shell, but the shell failed to explode and she refused to do its work. In vain did Molly and captain try to apply the match to all portions of its anatomy. It was of no avail, because the fuse had become clogged with Molly. The cannon refused to discharge its deadly contents on the oncoming English foe. The firing of the cannon was to cause General Washington to give Molly a captain's commission and a sword, but all that had to be cut out because of the cannon's unworkable behavior and the fuse was spoiled beyond repair.

To add to the trouble, Kane became riled in his lines, just as the cannon is supposed to be fired. Molly's lover, Captain Carrington, who has gone out on an expedition to find a wounded soldier, is going up to the gun badly hurt. Dr. Kane examined him and solemnly said to Molly: "Carrington is fatally wounded, but his condition is not serious. It is the behavior of the audience who are affected by the behavior of the gun and when Dr. Kane delivered himself of his remarkable speech the audience burst. A splendid stage manager saw the act and tried to stop it, but it was too late. The cannon and the entire troupe down. The tumbling over of a stack of guns and two smaller accidents did their share to upset the actors in the third act.

It was a magnificent audience that greeted Miss Kathryn Kibbler and her company last night when they came to the Lyceum for the first time in "Molly Pitcher." It was an expectant audience prepared to give this clever star a very cordial greeting in her new play. It was disappointed, however, when she came to the front and her singing and her abilities do not and a proper sense in the drama built by Giles McDonough around the figure of the heroine of the battle of Monmouth.

The story of the play makes Molly Pitcher an American country girl from Carlisle, Pa., simple, uneducated and dumb in speech as a girl of her age. Her speech is so good that the continental troops are led to believe that she is a British spy. She saves the British army on the night of the battle of Monmouth, and her uncle, Mr. Galloway, a staunch Tory of Philadelphia, takes her to his home in that city. There Molly is introduced to the quality and vices of the highest society of the day, which she despises. She is also introduced to the pleasures of the high society, which she despises. She is also introduced to the pleasures of the high society, which she despises. She is also introduced to the pleasures of the high society, which she despises.

The second act occurs in Monsieur Victor's fencing school, Mr. Victor wishing to put aside the rustic awkwardness which had indirectly brought Carrington ill-fortune, comes to Madame Victor for social polishing. She meets Anne Carrington, who is taking fencing lessons from Monsieur Victor. Knowing that Molly is in communication with the Continental army Anne Carrington tells her of a plot against the life of General Washington. A large hearing of the plot is made up of a captured clergyman named Morrell and his wife, the wife of the rebels and the wife of the British.
