WRECK CAR IN A WRECK.

Did Damage to Farmer Abbey's Wagon on Penn Avenue.

The wagon of M. H. Abbey, a farmer from Salem, Wayne county, was run into at noon yesterday near Penn avenue and Mulberry street by one of the wrecking cars of the Scranton Railway company which was going down the Penn avenue hill at a good rate of speed.

The wheels were knocked from under the wagon and it was badly used up generally. Following the wreck car was one of the big Providence cars which crashed into the remains of the wagon, reducing it to a wreck. Mr. Abbey and his horses escaped injury.

POLICE AND ALDERMEN.

Frank Petricelli, of 115 Penn avenue, yesterday caused the arrest of Frank Bishop and Katie Langan, of the same place, whom he charges with living in open lewdness. Magistrate Howe held both defendants in $300 bail for their appearance at court.

Harry Aronovitz, a newsboy, who is accused by the Lackawanna News company of failing to return money for papers taken out, was arrested yesterday and held in $300 bail by Magistrate Howe for his appearance at court.

JUST HOW THE PLAN FAILED

EXPLANATIONS OF WHY MEETING DID NOT OCCUR.

General Manager Silliman Gives Out a Lengthy Statement in Which He Flays the Business Men's Committee—Mr. Burns for the Committee Accuses Mr. Silliman of Having Backed Down Because He Learned the Vote Would Go Against Him. What the Strikers Say.

Explanations of the whys and wherefores of the failure of the business men's committee to bring General Manager Silliman and the strikers together, Thursday night, comprise the sum total of yesterday's strike developments.

Mr. Silliman makes a statement, in which he unreservedly places the blame on the business men's committee, and calls them everything but gentlemen. Mr. Burns, chairman of the committee, says Mr. Silliman backed out of his agreement when he learned that the men were not going to vote as he had all along expected they would. The strikers say Mr. Silliman alone was to blame, and that all the onus of the failure rests on him. Other members of the business men's committee make statements that agree and disagree with Mr. Burns' averments.

What Mr. Silliman has to say is couched in rather pointed language.

"It was clearly understood," said Mr. Silliman, "that the meeting was to be a meeting between me and all the old employes, and that the proposition I was to make was to be voted on by a secret ballot. I did not ask for the meeting. The committee proposed it, and I agreed to attend under the conditions named. On Wednesday, a subcommittee of the business men's committee informed me that the strikers had agreed to the proposition. Thursday morning the strikers had a meeting, at which they agreed not to consent to the secret ballot. They also suspended four men, who, I believe, were among those who are anxious to return to work.

COMMITTEE CALLED.

"At 5.15 o'clock Thursday evening, a sub-committee of the business men's committee came to my office and notified me that the meeting had been arranged for 7 o'clock. I promptly told them I would not attend. They had known of the fixing of the time for the meeting for a considerable part of the day and the strikers had known of it probably since morning. That it was known early in the day is proven by the fact that the Truth had an announcement of it in an early edition.

"I did not base my refusal to attend because of the committee's discourtesy. I could have overlooked that. There are a number of the old employes who are anxious to return to work and who, because of their not being in sympathy with the strike, attend meetings of the union but seldom. They heard that the meeting had been arranged for and a number of them called me up by 'phone or inquired from me by messenger if the story was true. I told them I did not know, that I had not as yet received any word about it from the committee. They expressed themselves as being anxious to be on hand when the meeting came off, and I promised them that the meeting would not take place until they were given an opportunity to be on hand. By the time the sub-committee got to me, with the notification of the fixing of the meeting, there was not sufficient time left in which to get word to these men I had promised to notify.

SUFFICIENT WARRANT.

"That, in itself, was sufficient warrant for me to refuse to attend the meeting. But it was not all. The main reason for my not intending to be present I did not want to disclose to the committee until they were ready to go. I suspected that I was not being honestly dealt with, and I wanted to satisfy myself about it. We talked for some time, and when the committee was apparently through with their business, I asked them if it was not true that the strikers had repudiated their agreement to have a secret ballot. 'Well, yes,' said one of their number, 'that is a fact. They are now refusing to have a secret ballot.'

"I had known of this since early in the day from a report of the strikers' morning meeting that came to my hands. I also knew almost to a certainty that the committee would not tell me about this, but would attempt to trick me into attending a meeting that under no circumstances I would agree to attend. The committee left, after inducing me to give them a promise to wait around for an hour or so. I waited two hours. Mr. Burns then informed me nothing had been accomplished towards straightening out the difficulty. I then went out of town.

"I am fully convinced that with a secret ballot the men would have voted to return to work. I am also positive that if there was an open ballot there would not be a single man, possibly, who would so vote. That this is believed by the strikers themselves is shown by the action of their executive board in rescinding their own action and then taking refuge behind their constitution and by-laws, which they say they discovered contains a clause forbidding secret ballots.

TRIED TO TRICK HIM.

"But be that as it may, the business men's committee did their work in a very unbusiness-like way. They deliberately tried to trick me. They were not frank and honest in their dealings with me, and I will always believe so until they explain away certain things that to me are impossible of satisfactory explanation. I say, without equivocation, after calmly thinking on the matter for a day, that this business men's committee, as a committee, are not gentlemen. They are not honorable men. To me they appear like a pack of small, mean rascals. At first I thought they were sincere; that they had the interests of the city at heart and I willingly agreed to act with them. I believe now they had no interest other than securing some notoriety for themselves."

Mr. Silliman added that the company is now done with mediators. An agent was sent to Buffalo last night to secure men, and all the lines not yet opened will be opened up at once, and the company will proceed to operate its system without expectation of the striking employes coming back to work.

Chairman I. H. Burns, when asked for an expression on the failure of the committee's plan, said:

"Everybody can see why the meeting did not take place. Mr. Silliman learned that the vote was not going to pan out as he had expected and backed down. A sick man doesn't care to go out much, you know.

"The committee will not give up yet. We will resume business tomorrow. We may go to Philadelphia before we get through."

In yesterday's Tribune, it was printed that the strikers said the suspension of the four members accused of disloyalty precluded their attendance at the Thursday night meeting. It should have read exactly opposite. The leaving out of the word "not" before "preclude" caused the mistake.

STRIKERS' STATEMENT.

The statement given out by the strikers' executive board is as follows:

While our position toward the Scranton Railway company has been endorsed by the citizens, as well as the entire labor element of Lackawanna county, yet we have never failed to favor any and all agencies to effect an honorable adjustment of the trouble, and when cited before the citizens committee we cheerfully responded and agreed to unite with the management of the company in any move that might tend to an honorable termination of the strife.

This we recognize is the paramount duty of both contending parties. The business men's committee came to us with the proposition that Mr. Silliman would meet the men and advocate conditions upon which a settlement might be perfected, providing said conditions were acceptable to the majority of our members. These conditions were not made known to us. The understanding upon which Mr. Silliman desired to appear before our membership was that he should have the privilege of presenting his propositions to the employes, together with the privilege of supporting the same in argument, or, according to his original proposition for arbitration, he desired to present his side of the case and eliminate any argument or evidence which might be desired to produce by the men. This, while considered materially unfair, was acceded to.

In accordance with the pleasure of Mr. Silliman, as set forth by the business men's committee, and desirous of expediting the movement, our membership was notified, so far as possible, to be in attendance at a meeting especially arranged to be held at 8 p. m., Nov. 21, to listen to and accept or reject the propositions of the management.

Another condition which it was necessary to agree to to comply with the management was the exclusion from that conference of our national representative and the representatives of the Central Labor union. In direct violation of all rules and usages these representatives waived their right to be present at the meeting.

At a late hour, and after the meeting had been arranged for, the committee was notified that the manager of the traction company desired a secret ballot. This was a request which, if granted, would require the setting aside of the constitution. This required a special act of the association.

Understanding the propositions of the manager to embody the possibility of a part of the men returning, it was considered advisable that a fair vote upon such a proposition might show the disposition of the men relative to their position as union men. Consequently, there was an invitation to the business men's committee and any of the traction officials who might be desirous of lending their aid to a settlement.

The meeting was regularly called to meet in an evening session. At an early hour the business men's committee appeared and stated that Mr. Silliman" insisted that under no consideration would he appear before the meeting unless his one-sided propositions were accepted. After some discussion it was passed upon that Mr. Silliman would be received upon his own terms and that a waiver of the provision of the laws of the association would be made and a secret ballot taken. This was made known to the committee, who attempted to secure the attendance of the manager. This, it seemed, was impossible.

The public can draw its own conclusions. Mr. Burke, director, who was also invited to attend the meeting, refused to confront the inevitable.

Yet the disposition of the company was conveyed to the men and unanimously voted down, the vote being taken in the presence of the committee, showing that body that any conditions presented by the company which will be entertained must contain the understanding that the union shall be preserved, and no conditions embodying any measure not looking to the reinstatement of every member of our union, as union men, will not be tolerated by the members of our division. Thus ends this attempt at settlement. We will settle this strike right and according to the interests of organized labor or we can not conscientiously settle at all. Thus, from the apparent pleasure of the traction company, no settlement is as yet in sight.

Executive Committee.

A BAD WRECK WAS BARELY AVERTED

Frank Jones Discovered Mike Kosh Clogging a Switch on the Lackawanna Yesterday Morning.

A serious disaster was prevented early yesterday morning, near the West Lackawanna avenue crossing of the Lackawanna railroad, by Frank F. Jones, who discovered Mike Kosh in the act of placing an obstruction on the track, which, in the opinion of railroad men, would have resulted in the wrecking of the 1.15 Buffalo train, which pulled out from the station only a few minutes after Jones had discovered the obstruction. Kosh has been arrested and is now in the county jail.

Jones is a switchman, and noticed Kosh bending down over the westerly track and acting in a suspicious manner, about one hundred feet north of the Lackawanna avenue crossing. Jones started after Kosh, but the latter ran up the track, but not before he had been recognized.

Jones found two large steel burrs lying on the track and a little further up found a bolt wedged in the frog of a switch in such a manner as would have undoubtedly caused the donkey truck of a locomotive striking it to lift up and thus overturn the engine.

Jones first took care to pry out this bolt, and then started after Kosh, who had disappeared. A few minutes afterwards the Buffalo express came thundering by, the passengers oblivious of the danger to which they were exposed but a short time before.

Kosh has been employed at the Diamond breaker as a slatepicker, and was arrested yesterday morning while on his way to work. He was brought before Magistrate Millar, to whom he explained, through an interpreter, that he has only been in this country four months.

He offered no explanation of his act, except to say that he was only fooling. The magistrate committed him to the county jail in default of $800 bail, remarking that it was a pretty dangerous kind of fooling.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS FOR THE CHILDREN

The Tribune Will Help Make the Holiday Season Joyous

EDUCATIONAL CONTEST FOR THE YOUNG PEOPLE

Many Suitable and Valuable Presents to Be Given Young Readers of The Tribune Who Succeed in Making the Most Words Out of the Letters Contained in "Scranton Tribune."—Four Weeks of Amusement for Winter Evenings. Children of Fifteen Years and Under Can Compete—Contest Will Close Saturday, December 21, So That the Successful Young Contestants Can Be Ascertained and Gifts Distributed Before Christmas Day.

THE CHILDREN of Scranton, like children elsewhere, all over the civilized world, are beginning already to look forward with many anticipations and hopes, more or less defined, to the glad Christmas time, now only a little more than a month away. The merry holiday season so near at hand is the children's time for rejoicing. Plans are being made to heartily enjoy the brief lapse from school duties and every girl and boy will be on her or his best behavior in an effort to convince fond parents or an indulgent Santa Claus that they are fully worthy of the best Christmas gifts that can be bestowed. The Sunday schools will again take on their annual air of preholiday activity, more especially those that make a practice of bestowing gifts upon their pupils, and each Sunday school teacher will note with pride that her class has swelled to the full seating capacity.

The Tribune intends to take a hand in helping to make this Christmas one to be remembered in the homes of Scranton. It proposes to inaugurate a "Junior Educational Contest" for the children of the Lackawanna Valley. This contest will differ from its usual annual "Educational Contests" in that no one over 15 years of age will be allowed to take part. It will be for the children, "The Tribune's Children," and numerous gifts, especially selected and appropriate for Christmastide, will be distributed on the day before Christmas to the brightest, keenest-witted of the boys and girls who participate in it. There will be all manner of gifts to the successful little men and women, including handsome gold and silver watches, dolls, sleds, skates, games and other presents, and every child in Northeastern Pennsylvania is free to enter the contest and match his wits and ability to spell against every other child in this large territory, providing the contestant is not over 15 years of age. It will make no difference whether or not the contestants' parents are subscribers to The Tribune. All are free to enter and it will not cost a single penny for any one to try for the gifts nor will the gifts cost the successful ones a penny. The Tribune will pay all the expense and bestow the awards in order of merit.

Who Can Build the Most Words?

The contest which begins on Monday morning will be a word contest. Prizes will be given to the boys and girls building the largest number of words out of the letters contained in "SCRANTON TRIBUNE." It will not be necessary to fill out an entry blank or coupon of any kind. Any one who wishes to try for the prizes will only have to write his list of words, as many as he can possibly think of, sign his full name and address, and forward the list to The Tribune office. The contest will last four weeks, closing on Saturday evening, Dec. 21, at 8 o'clock. The girl or boy who has the largest number of words formed out of these fifteen letters will be entitled to the first of the Christmas gifts; the one having the second largest number of words will receive the second in the list, and so on as long as the presents last. The list of winners, with the number of words each submits, will be published in The Tribune as soon after the contest closes as possible.

No more fascinating or instructive amusement can be found for a winter's evening than is here presented. The multitude of words that can be constructed from the five vowels and ten consonants forming the name "Scranton Tribune" will astonish the competitors, and in frequent perusals of the dictionary and spelling books a knowledge of the construction of words will be obtained that can be gotten in no other way. Parents should hail this contest with joy, especially those who have children who are prone "to wander from their warm firesides" and spend their evenings in an idle manner.

First Prize—Solid Gold Watch.

The first prize is to be a handsome solid gold watch, beautifully engraved and fully warranted. Then there will be several silver watches, sleds, skates, foot ball, dolls and other things that especially appeal to children not over 15 years of age. There will be about twenty presents in all, thus giving an opportunity to that many juvenile scholars to win a fine Christmas gift without any expense and to improve their minds at the same time. The full list of prizes will be announced and exhibited as soon as they can be selected.

It should be distinctly understood that any child not over 15 years of age, residing in Northeastern Pennsylvania, may strive for one of these prizes, with out any conditions as to whether their parents are subscribers of The Tribune or not. The competitors may send their lists at any time after Monday morning and if after they have sent a list they think of more words, they may send another list or as many more lists as they wish, providing, of course, that each list is complete in itself and one is not to be added to another. That cannot be allowed because of the amount of work and confusion it would involve.

The children of Scranton and the children of the suburban towns will have an equal opportunity to win handsome and useful Christmas presents for themselves. It is a principle, long established, that that which one obtains by his or her own exertions is all the more highly cherished. A gift absolutely free and given for no reason or consideration would not be thought half as much of as the one that is the token of earnest endeavor and honest reward. That is the spirit in which The Tribune means to appeal to the children, and while at least twenty little ones will be made very happy on Christmas day by reason of their participation in this "Junior Educational Contest," each one of the twenty fortunate ones will have played a most important part, while the remainder will have benefited greatly by their search after words that fit into the fifteen letters selected as the keystone of the plan.

The list of prizes will be given in full next week and the prizes themselves will be conspicuously displayed after Thanksgiving in The Tribune's windows. There the boys and girls can come and see what is offered to them, and very few of them will go away without an ambition to win one of the good things they see, and every single one of the gifts will be worth the winning and all the work of searching school books and dictionaries. Of course, parents and teachers can help the contestants. It would be hard to prevent that; but each list must be written by the contestants themselves when sent to The Tribune office.

The rules of the contest (all contests must be bounded by rules, no matter how simple the conditions are) will be as follows:

Rules.

Prizes will be given to the boy or girl building the largest number of words out of the letters contained in "Scranton Tribune."

No letters must be used any more times than they appear in these two words. As an instance a word with more than one "E" would not be admitted, but a word might contain two "E's" or three "N's."

Only words found in the main portion of "Webster's International Dictionary" will be allowed. Proper names, or any other words appearing in the "Appendix" will not be admitted. Under this rule the words "Scranton" and "Tribune" are debarred.

Write on one side of the paper only.

Write very plainly; if possible, use a typewriter.

Place the words in alphabetical order, numbered in rotation.

Plurals formed by adding "s" or "es" not allowed.

Address your letter to "Contest Editor, Scranton Tribune, Scranton, Pa."

All Questions Will Be Answered.

All letters of inquiry for additional information will be promptly answered if addressed as above. There will be no need to look for a coupon in the paper in order to enter the contest, as none will be published, there being no necessity for it.

If there should be two or more lists containing the same number of words the one that is received at The Tribune office first will have precedence over the others. This will be determined by the editor of the contest writing the exact time on each list as soon as it reaches his hands.

Now, then, girls and boys, get ready. Sharpen up your pencils, open your writing pads, put on your thinking caps and begin as soon as you can. Remember that there is a beautiful gold watch awaiting the brightest and that a score of other presents lie within your reach if you but possess the patience and ability to study hard for the next four weeks. And Christmas this year will dawn all the brighter and more joyous if you have a beautiful present awaiting you at The Tribune office.

MORE EXAMINATIONS.

Local Civil Service Board Makes New Announcements.

L. G. Schautz, W. D. Roche and D. H. Jenkins, the local civil service examining board, yesterday gave out the following announcements of examinations to be held in the near future:
