CARBONDALE'S SORROW.

Mourning Over the Death of the Four Victims of the Ontario & Western Wreck.

The awful tragedy that was enacted on the Ontario and Western railroad Minnie French, soprano; Mr. Eugene yesterday cast its shaddow over Carbondale, for the four lives sacrificed were given by residents of this city, men who were well known and respected throughout the community. The news was followed by a depression of spirits and the fate of the men who died at their posts was a sad topic of discussion.

Melvin Whiting was the oldest of the four. He resided at 22 Canaan street, with his wife and one daughter. Mrs Whiting is in poor health and the corrow of her affliction is all the more beavy. Mr. Whiting was born in Nev. York state about thirty-five years ago and came to this city about ten years ago and was employed for that length of time on the Ontario and Western. Charles A. Millard, the fireman, was conspicuous among the young men of the town. He was a veteran of the Spanish-American war, having enlisted in the Thirteenth regiment, serving in Company F until mustered out. Since then he was employed on the Ontario and Western. He is survived by his wife, who was Miss Hattle Wherry, and an infant girl. He was 26 years of age, His parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Millard, of 126 Belmont street, and the following sisters and brothers also survive: Mrs. Leon F. Scott, Bessie, Myrtle, Gertrude and Jim Millard, all of Carbondale. Patrick Duffy, the middle brakeman was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Duffy, a family highly esteemed among their neighbors on the West Side About six months ago, he secured work on the Ontario and Western. Prior to that time he was a bartender in "Zip" Bell's restaurant, on Main street. He had a host of friends. Duffy was about 25 years of age and was unmar-

He lived with his brother, Thomas Budd, on Belmont street. Only a month ago, he went to work on the Ontario and Western. Prior to that time he worked about the coal yard of the Delaware and Hudson.

None of the bodies was received in this city, the three that were recovered. Millard, Duffy and Budd, having been taken to Middletown, N. Y., to be prepared for burial. There was a big crowd at the 4 o'clock Ontario and Western train, expecting to receive the bodies of the three men, but it was disappointed. The bodies are expected to reached the city today. Whiting's body had not been recov ered up to late last night. It is buried under the one hundred tons weight o the locomotive and must be terrib!

MISS HOLLAND'S RECEPTION.

"The Power Behind the Throne Greeted with Big Audience.

An audience that filled the Grand to the doors, gave an enthusiastic greeting to Mildred Holland last night, when she appeared in "The Power Behind the Throne," the play in which she has won many a triumph since it was staged, a little more than a year. The piece was given in Carbondale, when it made the profound impression that was means of attracting the crowded house of last night. The memory of the comedy and pathos, the beautiful home life of Aria (Miss Holland), the romance that marked her young life, lingered in the minds of Carbondalians and they were eager to greet Miss Holland a they did last evening. The excellence of last season is also true of this year's production, and the enthusiastic audi- and irritating troubles is Itching Piles. ence bespoke their appreciation in numerous curtain calls. The supporting company is splendid, the accessories are, as usual, complete in every detail; in short, nothing was lacking to make a finished performance. As related at length in another column in this department, this is Miss Holland's farewell in "The Power Reaind the Throne."

Miss Elita Proctor Otis, who appeared here Christmas, announces, in conjunction with her manager, Frank L. Goodman, that she will give an elaborate dramatic production next season of De-Lara's "Messalina." the story in which Caive, the lyric song-bird, will be heard a this country for the first time with Grau's Metropolitan Opera company, New York.

Ernest Gamble's Concert.

Ernest Gamble, assisted by Frederick Morley, planist, and Miss Grace Jen-kins, violinist, gave one of the finest concerts ever heard in this city at the Grand last night. It was the third number in the Smith-Singer course of Brockway entertainments. An audience that filled the opera house gave Mr. Gamble and his associates an enthusiastic greeting. Camble's singing was superb. He is a splendid and satisfy the audience, several numbers being re-demanded. Miss Jenkins and a few weeks with her mother. Mr. Morley were likewise heartily encored. Mr. Gamble made a decided hit. and is sure to be welcomed on a return visit to Carbondale.

it had been shot out of a cannon. Fitzgerald who was on the tender hung on to the handles beside him with a desperate grasp, expecting to be swept off any minute. In the middle of an s-like curve about a mile this side of Starlight, the flange of the ocomotive wheel snapped, or at least the engine left the rails at this point. The speed had not been decreased, but seemed to be gaining and was 75 or 80 miles an hour when the derailment took place. The result can be pictured in one's imagination. The engine when it jumped, shot across the rails, and plowed into earth and turned, describing a half-circle before it fell over on its side. The full force of the train behind, each of the cars weighing 25 or 30 tons, moved and pushed the engine of 100 tons about as if it were a toy. When the crash ceased and the furious force of the mad train was spent, the engine was a wreck. Reaching from the outer rail it lay down the field. Sunken with the earth, it was a wall against which the cars rammed themselves with a wild unrestrained force until nothing buzzing, ringing, snapping, rumble or in consequence many of them went remained but a mountain of debris. The heavy timbers of stout cars were crushed and splintered like matchboards. Car trucks were piled on top of each other and some were rolled down the incline beside the track. In two or three places cars were forced up into the air for ten or twelve feet, The rails on one side snapped and ripped off and the hundreds of tons of feet on both sides of the track. It was picture of terrible confusion and it would make one shudder as he viewed he wreckage and contemplated the fate of the men who were caught and out, either between the cars or under Died at Their Posts.

None of the poor men had the least chance to save themselves. To them, to jump threatened an awful fate, for they lived in the hope that the train could be checked. The engineer, fireman and the two brakemen were in this plight. They were forced to stick to their posts and there they died. Conductor Smith and Brakeman Walsh were more fortunate. The speed of the train and the heaps of snow on the cars prevented them from making any headway. So when the erash came they were only a few cars off from the caboose. When they felt the cars jamming and heard the awful noise they jumped. Smith landed safely. Walsh did not fare so well as his lean was greater. In falling his head came in contact with something that tore the left scalp for several inches. His left shoulder was badly bruised. interfering with muscles of his arms, Walsh could not tell how it happened. The wreck and sacrifice were complete before he had the least chance to real ize what was going on. The train left Poyntelle at 6.02 in the morning, and in a few minutes it was on its wild run, In lightning time it passed across his mind that the train was running away and in another instant the crash came and he and Smith were leaping for their lives. It was a terrible experience and Walsh was quite unnerved by the

When the engine whisile shricked for the brakes and the speed grew mad instead of lessening, be felt that his time had come and he gripped his hold though with little faith that he would escape death. When he was cast off the engine by the terrible lurch when it ploughed into the earth, he was not stunned, he declared, and as he lay on the ground he was almost paralyzed with fear at the sound of the cars as they crashed together and were torn apart. He was half sick all day, and would not discuss his experience until he could not escape the importunities of his questioners.

Altoona, Pa., Dec. 27.-What the local police consider two of the most accomplished and certainly the most unique young crooks ever arrested in this city were apprehended by Police Chief at a laundry here this morning. They are John H. Foster, alias Francis Vernier, 19 years of age, of 447 Richmond street. Philadelphia, and Harry Ole-of 2260 North Lambert street, in the same city. They are boarding house thieves and kept a diary of their stealings. A note book dropped unnoticed from Foster's pocket at his boarding house this morning. The book led to their undoalias Carl Brown, aged 18 years,

ing. It was turned over to the police, When taken into custody they confessed their crimes. On one page was written: "Left Philadelphia Dec. 11, at 11 a. m. Arrived Harrisburg 6.30 a. m and secured board at Shader's, 1719 Hunter street. Took gold necklace, silver bracelet, two gold pins, razor, overcoat, pair of shoes, four handkerchiefs, watch chain and two neckties. Got board same afternoon at Lewis', 941 North Seventh street; left next morning at 7.30.

"Took train for Altoona, Dec. 22, arrived 10.30 a, m., secured board at 1015 Green avenue." Chief Kautz, of the Harrisburg police, was notified of the apprehension of the two men and he came here tonight and took the men to Harrisburg for trial.
