Man Who Stole $403 at Mayfield to Be Brought Here.—District Attorney W. R. Lewis yesterday appointed Detective Edward J. Neary, of Carbondale, as agent to secure papers for the extradition of Stephen Kennell, now in Binghamton, who is wanted for larceny.

Neary will proceed to Binghamton today to secure a requisition from Governor Stone on Governor Odell for the extradition of Kennell.

The charge against Kennell is the theft of $403 from the boarding house, at 1000 Broadway, owned by Mrs. M. J. Musmanni, of Mayfield.

On the Saturday before last Christmas, Musmanni closed up his boarding house and went home, carrying $403 in a shopping bag. He placed it in his bureau and went to bed. The next morning the shopping bag, its contents and Boarder Kennell were missing.

Musmanni had a warrant sworn out for Kennell's arrest and placed it in the hands of Detective Neary. A description of the suspected thief was sent to all the neighboring cities by Detective Neary. Two weeks ago word was received from Detective Robert Stevenson, of Binghamton, that a man answering Kennell's description was laid up in a Binghamton hospital with a crushed foot, the result of a railroad accident.

Detective Neary and Mr. Musmanni went to Binghamton, identified the hospital patient as Kennell and cured him of his admission of his guilt. He stated that he gave all except $30 of the money to his boarding mistress, living on Wilson street. Binghamton, but she averred that all she received was $25.

At the last session of the grand jury Kennell was presented for larceny and a true bill was returned against him.

TRIBUTES TO JUDGE JESSUP

SPECIAL MEETING OF THE BAR ASSOCIATION.

Addresses by James H. Torrey, Judge John P. Kelly, Superior Court Judge James A. Beaver, ex-Supreme Court Justice Alfred Hund, Major Everett Warren, John M. Harris and A. W. Berthoff. Resolutions Adopted Expressive of the Sentiments of the Bar.

Both the superior and common pleas courts adjourned yesterday morning at 11 o'clock out of respect for the late and lamented Judge Jessup. Immediately after the adjournment, the Lackawanna Bar association met in special session to take action on Judge Jessup's death.

Never before was there a more representative or larger attendance of the bar and heads of the law firms there were many present prominent in business and other circles.

The meeting was called to order by James H. Torrey, president of the Bar association. In opening the meeting, Mr. Torrey said:

The meeting will please come to order. The brightest light in our community has been suddenly extinguished. The pure and noble spirit, whose presence among us has been years at once a benediction and an inspiration, has been instantaneously translated to a wider and more congenial sphere. It is not, for God has taken him, that we are bereft of a great and noble soul. It is not, for God has taken him, that we are bereft of a great and noble soul. It is not, for God has taken him, that we are bereft of a great and noble soul.

For ourselves there remains the necessity of expressing in some way our heartfelt sorrow, and of recording the sentiments of admiration and affection which were held by his professional brethren. Judge Jessup's achievements will be recalled and his character delineated by those more capable and worthy than myself for their expression. Judge Jessup's achievements will be recalled and his character delineated by those more capable and worthy than myself for their expression.

Judge Kelly presided. Judge John P. Kelly was chosen to preside at the meeting. In taking the chair, he spoke as follows:

Gentlemen of the Bar: We have met here for the purpose of taking suitable action on account of the death of one of the most distinguished lawyers that Pennsylvania ever produced. He certainly was one of the most distinguished lawyers that Pennsylvania ever produced. He certainly was one of the most distinguished lawyers that Pennsylvania ever produced.

Judge Kelly appointed as a committee on resolutions ex-Supreme Court Justice Alfred Hund, ex-Superior Court Judge E. N. Willard, President Judge H. M. Edwards, Charles H. Welles and Joseph O'Brien. Thomas F. Wells was selected as secretary.

Judge Beaver's eulogy. Judge James A. Beaver, representing the Superior court, was the next to speak. He said:

Mr. Chairman and Brethren of the Bar: My chief has directed me to say a word for the court, and I am too good a soldier not to obey. But I had supposed, of course, that I might not be called upon until after the committee had made their report, and that I might gain inspiration from what had been said by others; but no one can be called upon at any time to say a word with regard to Judge Jessup and his character and relations to the community as a whole without feeling him ready to say something.

It is a privilege to say that to the unexpected that happened. And it is true, but it is equally true—and it is made true by all human experience—that we ought to expect the unexpected. You can see such an expression. I sat in my office the other day when a telegram boy came in. He had been planning for a college class reunion. In all my planning the one man that was uppermost was a lovely character of our class, the life and the spirit of the home and the joy of it a little brighter than in the past, and he had his arm in the Confederate service. I looked at the telegram and this is what it said: "Your dear old father is dead," signed by his son.

Judge Hund came into my room yesterday morning early. I was just out of bed, and he said, "Will you say a word for the court this morning at 10 o'clock in ten minutes, it was all over." The first feeling was like the blow of a blue gun. I was stunned; I could not believe it. I had known the thought of personal bereavement. I had known Judge Jessup for more than thirty years. We met after the Civil war.

The officers of the National Guard of Pennsylvania—not then called the National Guard—were endeavoring to have the law revised and the organization revived, and Judge Jessup was then one of the best of our judges of Pennsylvania. He was a man of full stature, of the impress himself upon all with whom he came in contact, and one of the distinct recollections that I bring with me and that I treasure and have carried with me all the way through these thirty years, was his strong personality, and the manner in which he impressed all of us who came in contact with him.

It is somewhat difficult to sum up Judge Jessup's character in a word and without preparation for it, because he was a very strong man, an unusually strong man, and that was partly due to his inheritance. The law of heredity was very apparent in him. You know his ancestry; you know in this community what strong place his father had here; and those who have given any attention to what went before would expect that such personality from that ancestry as was manifest in Judge Jessup's life and is manifest in his brothers who are missionaries in Syria.

True character, that rings true to every demand that is made upon it, is what I think you will find to be the keynote in the character of this family of which he was such a distinguished member. He was true to his inheritance; he was true to himself. It is a pretty large thing to say of a man that he is true to himself, true to his own ideal, true to his best thoughts, true to the things that come to him as an inspiration in his best moments, when he is alone with things that are pure and clean and true and when there is none of the strenuous life that we live that drives these ideals out of a man's mind. And I have been always impressed with the fact that Judge Jessup was true to himself, true to his best ideal, true to his largest and broadest and highest hope. And so it is true that it made very little difference to him when the call came.

Some of us would like to have a little time for preparation; some of us would like to have the future and look at it squarely in the face and see what is to be done with reference to it. But I do not believe it was necessary in his case. I think that ten minutes—nine of which were probably unconscious moments, and the other one probably gave him no intimation of what the end would be. I don't believe that was necessary. He lived a life of such a nature that the requirements, because he had lived just such a life.

And I need not say to you, brethren, that he was true to the decision, true to the highest demands, true to his best instincts, true to the best that is behind it and true to the best that is before it; and when you say that of a lawyer you say all that need mean so far as his profession is concerned. He was true to the trusts that arose out of the relation of lawyer and client, and he was true to the court and true to his brethren. I never heard his word questioned. I never heard a statement of fact made by him doubted; and the relation which he bore to you, my brethren, in the trial of cases you know better than I. But I would like to say that his word was as good as any written agreement which the rules of our court require. It was not, then, my estimate of the man is all wrong.

The committee has tried to realize, and so I shall say nothing further than this, and what I have said has been so imperfectly said that I feel that it is in any sense a just tribute to the man who was my friend, and who was so many of them but what you can count them, and as they go one by one, those of us who have known him from our boyhood, who can remember from our college days and who can remember the impression that they made upon our minds and our hearts, in our younger days, feel the passage of time and feel the importance of the message that he has left to us, as a legacy, and if there is truth in the religion in which Judge Jessup believed with his whole soul, if there is truth in the belief that he held in his heart, if there comes to us the bright and beautiful reflection that there shall be friendships undimmed by time, reunited hereafter.

JUSTICE HANDS WORDS.

Justice Hand, in presenting the report of the committee on resolutions, said:

It may be expected that I should say a word after the presentation of these resolutions. I wish to say that Judge Jessup was a great and noble soul, and that his death is a great loss to the community. He was a man of full stature, of the impress himself upon all with whom he came in contact, and one of the distinct recollections that I bring with me and that I treasure and have carried with me all the way through these thirty years, was his strong personality, and the manner in which he impressed all of us who came in contact with him.

After I had completed my studies and had been admitted to the bar of Susquehanna county, and was studying a year to see what place in the world I would like to take, I came to you, and I said, "Let us go to Scranton." The firm was then formed in which I began my professional career.

He showed his character as a teacher in another qualification, and that was, he knew how to put responsibility on to the scholar, and the thing that he did was to make us feel that we were responsible for our own work, and that we were responsible for the work of the firm.

The bar of Lackawanna county is called to say farewell to a brother beloved, a rival respected, a lawyer gifted and learned, a citizen honored and trusted, a Christian crowned with an ever-lasting laurel, and a man whose life was a lesson to us all.

Such preparation before the conflict, such sweeping of the whole field, such fidelity to the client, the confidence we put in him, the great wreath of virtues worthy of imitation. It is rare to find such a combination of zeal, intelligence, indomitable industry, labor, courage, purity of motive, and high ideals, with courage and cheer, sincerity with discretion, hope to the end, and loyalty with high honor. It was to him a labor of a lifetime, as it is to all of us, in order to be a lawyer, a character could shine without parallel for his Master.

But let us lay our laurels with flowers on his tomb, laying his mantle may fall upon us and inspire us with a high sense of the nobility of our profession.

MAJOR WARREN'S TRIBUTE.

Major Everett Warren made reference to the domestic life of the deceased Judge in the following remarks to the court:

Mr. Chairman: A king has fallen in Israel, and we may well pause in the midst of our professional labors as a bar to pay our tribute of respect to his memory. I am loathe to allow the obsequies to be hurried to a close, and I would like to give some expression to my personal feelings at the loss that this bar has sustained. It is unnecessary to say that Judge Jessup was a man of full stature, of the impress himself upon all with whom he came in contact, and one of the distinct recollections that I bring with me and that I treasure and have carried with me all the way through these thirty years, was his strong personality, and the manner in which he impressed all of us who came in contact with him.

I have heard many times it said by members of the bar of other counties that Judge Jessup ranked among the first leaders of the bar through the history of this county. S. H. Twining, Optician, 131 PENN AVENUE.

I have had here and that side of life many times, but I do not know, it was the side of his life which he got his pleasure, and it was the side of his life that he commanded respect and even admiration from all those who knew anything of him. I think Judge Jessup's career will be remembered as long as these courts exist. His career at our bar started with the inception of the profession, and he was a leader, and his place it will be exceedingly difficult, if ever possible, to fill.

Brief addresses were also made by John M. Harris, who was once a student in Judge Jessup's office and by A. W. Berthoff, who was a one-time neighbor of the deceased judge and fellow practitioner for many years. The secretary read the following letter:

JUDGE ARCHIBALD'S LETTER.
James H. Torrey, esq., Scranton, Pa.:
Dear Sir:—I regret that a session of court at Harrisburg today prevents me from attending the bar meeting called to take action on the resolutions of Hon. W. H. Jessup. It is impossible to compress in a few suitable words my thoughts and feelings in regard to so sad an event. The community and the bar have both sustained a great loss.

Judge Jessup was a lawyer of commanding ability, having been called to the bar of this county at an early age, and he was a man of full stature, of the impress himself upon all with whom he came in contact, and one of the distinct recollections that I bring with me and that I treasure and have carried with me all the way through these thirty years, was his strong personality, and the manner in which he impressed all of us who came in contact with him.

The funeral of Judge Jessup will be held at 12 o'clock today at the home of Miss Mattie, 119 Jefferson avenue. A short service will be conducted by Rev. Dr. McLeod and the remains will be taken to Montrose in a private car attached to the 1:10 p. m. Delaware, Lackawanna and Western train. At Montrose services will be held in the Presbyterian church immediately after the arrival and interment will follow in the Montrose cemetery.

The honorary pall-bearers will be Judge James A. Beaver, of the Superior court; former Judge E. N. Willard, of that court; Judges H. M. Edwards, John P. Kelly and E. C. Newcomb, of the courts of this county; former Judge H. A. Knapp, Attorney S. B. Price and James H. Torrey. The active pall-bearers will be Henry W. Jessup, of New York; W. S. Mulford, of Montrose; Isaac Post, W. J. Hand, F. H. Kingsbury and Robert H. Jessup, of this city.

Members of the bar who intend to go to Montrose to meet at the court house at 12:45 sharp and to stand at the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western station in a body. Colonel L. A. Watres has arranged for transportation for the party to and from Montrose.

STANDING COMMITTEES FOR THE YEAR NAMED

Appointed at a Meeting of Officers and Managers of the Home for the Friendless.

There was a special meeting of the officers and managers of the Home for the Friendless yesterday at the Young Women's Christian association. The president, Mrs. W. D. Kennedy, announced the standing committee for the year.

Few changes were made. The new member of the board, Mrs. C. L. Frey, was placed on several committees, and an additional office, that of purchasing agent, was filled. Heretofore the position has been combined with that of chief clerk, but the growth of the work has overburdened the position, and as the constitution provides for a separate office, Mrs. N. Y. Leet, whose exceptional business abilities are recognized, was appointed for the quarter ending April 1.

The matter of printing the year book was left with the recording secretary, Mrs. A. K. Moffat. The following are the standing committees:

Advisory Committee—Hon. H. A. Knapp, E. B. Stingers, Col. E. H. Ripple. Officers of Executive Committee—Mrs. John Genter, Mrs. E. H. Ripple, Mrs. N. Y. Leet, Mrs. E. P. Chamberlin, Mrs. C. B. SHARED IN THE YEAR'S PROFITS

EMPLOYEES OF THE STOVE WORKS MADE HAPPY.

When the Shop Shut Down Yesterday the Men Were Assembled and After a Short Address by President Lansing 165 of the 275 Employees Received a Share of the Profits of Works for the Year 1901—Total Amount Distributed Was Between $3,500 and $4,000.

There was a sharing of profits at the Scranton Stove works yesterday afternoon for the first time, when between $3,500 and $4,000 was divided among 165 of the 275 employees of the works. About 110 were not eligible to share in this division of profits.

At 5 o'clock, after the day's work was completed, the men assembled in a large room adjoining the offices and President J. A. Lansing delivered a short address to the men, during which division of profits of the works during the year 1901.

One year ago I read to you a proposition of profit sharing which we put into force for the year 1901. It is my pleasure to report to you today that Treasurer Fuller is prepared to pay you the dividend per the proposal made and results shown for the year.

We regret that all of our employees do not come under the provisions of our proposition—only those continuously in our employ from June 1 to December 1 receive this present, or dividend. As I stated to you one year ago, our proposal was an entirely new and original one. We had no other establishment's experience to guide us as to the plan and prospective results. Manufacturers with whom the officers of this company discussed this project advised against it, stating that it would be received with suspicion and if no profits or dividends were made, the general impression would be that we had deceived our employees.

You will doubtless remember that I stated to you that unless the business and profits were larger than the year 1900, there would be nothing to divide. The margins in the stove manufacturing business are very small. The productive capacity of this industry in normal times are in excess of the demand or consumption of stoves. This you can readily see by referring to the weekly and monthly production of stoves in our plant. Besides, we are faced with this problem: An ever increasing demand for oil, gasoline and gas stoves for cooking and steam and furnace heating. An over-production always means a breaking down of price and profits. The year just closed showed the largest business in our history. Had we been able to have produced more goods, it would have been much larger.

Referring to the working out and the more harmonious relations in our shop under this new experiment, we cannot say that the result has been altogether satisfactory. While many employees have not done so well as they could, many have not done so, not only to their own embarrassment and loss, but to the loss of all. Perhaps we were too confident and expected too much, and it might be said that we are rather surprised that so many took us at our word and did their very best. At any rate, we hear all good will and compliment you on receiving something that is not large, but handsome, is extremely useful to have around the house.

THESE TWENTY YEARS.
Mr. Lansing said that on Feb. 1 it will be twenty years since he and the treasurer, A. C. Fuller, cast their fortunes with the Scranton Stove Works and many of their employees have been with them almost from that time until the present. During these twenty years they paid out millions of dollars in wages and had never once defaulted in their weekly payments.

The directors have not yet passed upon the question of continuing the profit sharing arrangement for 1902, he said, and he could not say what they will do with reference to it. He concluded by wishing his employees a happy and prosperous year and as he finished he was heartily cheered.

The names of those entitled to a share in the profits were read by Treasurer Fuller and the cashier turned over to the men the sum they were entitled to. Some received as high as $40.

It is a unique system that was employed in the profit sharing at the stove works and it originated with President Lansing. Out of the net profits of the company a dividend of 5 per cent. was declared on the working capital and the balance was the fund to be divided. The amount earned by each employee during the year was added to the capital and on this he received his pro rata share of the earnings over and above the five per cent. dividend in the same manner as the stockholders, the workman's dollar of earnings having exactly the same value as the dollar of the stockholder.

THOSE WHO SHARED.
Only those who were employed continuously in the stove works from at least the first of last July until the end of the year were entitled to a share in the profits. The floaters who come and go had no part in it. One of the objects of the plan is the encouraging of permanency on the part of employees.

The stove works had a very prosperous year and President Lansing said yesterday its output would have been much larger than it was if they could have secured more men.

Few residents of Scranton have any idea of the magnitude of these works, or the admirable manner in which the buildings are laid out. The comfort, convenience and safety of the workmen was kept constantly in mind when the buildings were designed and the result achieved are most gratifying in their results.
