MEDALS FOR THE MARKSMEN

PRESENTATION TOOK PLACE IN THE ARMORY.

Speeches by Brigadier General Gobin, Colonel L. A. Watres, Judge H. M. Edwards and Lieutenant Lewis B. Carter—Every Member of the Regiment Qualified as a Marksman. After the Presentation of the Badges the New Rifle Range Was Formally Opened.

Marksman's medals were conferred upon the members of the eight local companies of the Thirtieth regiment last night in the armory, in the presence of Brigadier General J. P. S. Gobin and many other dignitaries of the national guard of the state.

The general and his party arrived soon after 8 o'clock and were escorted to the platform at the eastern end of the building, where the exercises were conducted under the direction of the regimental inspector of rifle practice, Lewis B. Carter.

With General Gobin were the following members of his staff: Major Simon B. Cameron, of Marietta, commissioner of subsistence; Major George H. Hilberstadt, of Pottsville, brigade surgeon; Major Norman Paraguar, of Pottsville, judge advocate; Major W. W. Inglis, of this city, ordnance officer; Captain Fred R. Drake, of Easton, aide-de-camp. Others on the platform were Colonel E. H. Ripple, assistant adjutant general of the Thirtieth, whose rifle team has thrice won it in the battalion matches. It is known as the Stillwell trophy, and now becomes the permanent property of the battalion.

WINNING COMPANY TEAM. Company K had the winning team at the regimental match in October, and Lieutenant Franklin Henshaw won the pistol match at Ft. Gretna last summer. At the conclusion of the presentations there was a dress parade, after which General Gobin and party inspected the new rifle range in the basement. It is a 100-yard range, and the first shot was fired by General Gobin. He missed the target, but on his second attempt hit the bullseye. Colonel L. A. Watres and Colonel E. L. Hitchcock also made bullseyes. A large number of other officers made a try at the targets.

General Gobin said the Thirtieth not only has the finest armory in the state, but one of the best rifle ranges as well. The range has everything that is new and modern in the way of equipment.

Colonel L. A. Watres had arranged for a dinner for the Thirtieth at the Seranton club at 5:30 o'clock. The general missed his train connections, and when he had not arrived at 6:20 o'clock the colonel and his guests, the field and staff officers and ex-colonels of the regiment, sat down by themselves. The general arrived shortly after dinner had begun, in company with the members of his staff and Captain Dolph B. Atterton, who had been assigned to receive him.

Those present at the dinner, in addition to those named, were: Colonel L. A. Watres, Judge H. M. Edwards, Colonel E. H. Ripple, Colonel F. L. Hitchcock, Colonel George M. Hallstead, Major E. H. Field, Major Frank Robling, Jr., Major George H. Whitney, Major W. E. Kellar, Captain Dolph B. Atterton, Captain Frank M. Vandling, First Lieutenant R. J. Bourke, First Lieutenant David J. Davis, First Lieutenant W. B. Newberry, First Lieutenant P. F. Gunster and First Lieutenant Lewis P. Carter.

BALLOTING BY MAIL. Method of Nominating Town Officers at Scranton.

From the New York Evening Post. The town of Scituate, Mass., has just inaugurated a first trial of an interesting addition to the device for self-government. Although the experiment is not yet complete, and the conditions for it are of a peculiar and rather simple type, it is no less than a process of nominating public office by post. No particular examples were complained of in Scituate, nor was there, so far as learned, any special aggravation of party feeling. The town is a country town, the voters numbering only about 650 all told. Many of them live at some distance from the place where the town meeting, at which officers are elected, is held. The date of this meeting is in March, and that of the usual nominating meeting or caucus in February. Frequently the roads are bad in March and worse in the months before, so that attendance upon a caucus often causes a deal of inconvenience and loss of time. Quite upon private initiative, it was decided to give the voters a chance to express their preferences for nominees to the town officers elsewhere than in the usual caucus. A ballot was sent to each franchise-holder with a list of the aspirants for nomination. The ballot was secret, each voter being asked to return his ballot with the designation of his choice either marked or written in under the seal of the envelope which accompanied the ballots sent out. More than a majority of the citizens replied, and it is now thought beyond doubt that the ticket so nominated will be presented at the town meeting next month. Presentation of an opposition ticket is not excluded by this action, nor is it impossible that some other than the ticket already named will be the meeting's choice. Furthermore, it is not necessarily to be inferred that such a plan would be practicable where party lines were sharply drawn, or where factions were high within the parties themselves. This was a citizen's movement, and as such, the use of anonymous ballots could be ventured without much fear. There exists no authority for such a procedure in Massachusetts law, but it is regarded as doubtful whether the method could be rejected as plainly contrary to law.

AS VIEWED BY COLONEL BRYAN

sitting about the body with clubs fearing, characterized, would indicate they were in dread that they are mistaken.

The great surplus reported by Secretary Gage when he resigned the treasury portfolio was something, Mr. Bryan declared, the Republicans did not foresee and were in no wise responsible for. An unexpected output of gold and the wars all over the world, he said, accounts for the surplus. He roundly denounced the propositions of some writers, branch banks and redeemable silver dollars, which the congress is considering as means of reducing the surplus. The first, he said, means more favoritism to the banks and less security to the depositor. The second means of bank monopoly. The third he likened to a top of credit spinning on a point of gold. And yet they say the money question is dead, the speaker remarked.

THE TRUST QUESTION.

After dealing at length with the trust question along the familiar lines of his campaign speeches, he took up the subject of expansion.

Expansion, he said, is a deceptive term. Expansion means an extension without change of the form of government. Imperialism was where a country expanded, but with a change of government.

The Downs case decision, that the constitution does not follow the flag, was characterized as being entirely in worse than the Dred-Scott decision. He meant, said he, that an American president and American congress can deal with the Porto Ricans as George III dealt with us 125 years ago. It means we can tax without representation. It means that we can cast government over another people as you would cast a net over a bird, and if they would not accept the government, shoot them until they acquiesce, or at least cease protesting.

When an expansionist deals with the Philippines question he will defend his position on three grounds, first, that there's money in it; second, that God's in it, and third, that we're in it and can't get out.

Every expansionist speech ever heard could be boiled down into this, "Sorry we got in; looks Providential; how much is there in it?"

Referring to the "failure of the United States to extend or express sympathy with the Boers, as it had to every other nation struggling for liberty," Mr. Bryan explained that the reason we do not sympathize with the Boers is that it would cause England to extend sympathy to the Filipinos. This and other references to the Boers were provocative of the most enthusiastic cheering of the evening.

EXTENSION OF TRADE.

Mr. Bryan said he believed in extending our trade, but not at the price of going to war. He said, however, he advised that those who favored it should be called upon to furnish the blood. The trouble in the Philippines could be subdued, he said, by promising the equality of man, and measuring greatness by service.

On the stage were about a hundred prominent Democrats and a sprinkling of Republicans, who had been invited to act as vice presidents. In a box to the right of the speaker sat an American flag, sat Bishop Hoban and a number of priests, who were present as special guests of St. Brendan's council, Young Men's Institute, under whose auspices the lecture was given.

In his introductory remarks, Mr. Bryan said that he was glad to see an American flag, sat Bishop Hoban and a number of priests, who were present as special guests of St. Brendan's council, Young Men's Institute, under whose auspices the lecture was given.

He was accompanied to the home of Mr. Chance by E. J. Lynett, P. J. Casey and J. M. Chance. During his progress from the train to the carriage he was surrounded by many men, who shook his hand.
