TEN PAGES.

SCRANTON, APRIL 15, 1902.

In any event the long and faithful service of General Brooke should be recognized by the administration.

The Case of General Miles.

IN VIEW of the probable early and involuntary retirement of Nelson A. Miles from the command of the army, much discussion of his record has broken out. This seems to be unnecessary.

Hands Across the Sea.

THE reception among American educators of Cecil Rhodes' bequest of scholarships in Oxford for American students has been most cordial.

Capital and Labor.

IT IS VERY unfortunate that the irresistible tendency of our age which draws manufacturing into immense establishments, rendering it impossible for employers to reside near to obtain that intimate acquaintance with employees which, under the old system of manufacturing in very small establishments, made the relation of master and man more pleasing to both.

looks more closely at the mere instruction involved in Cecil Rhodes' idea than at the large advantage to alert young Americans of four years' social contact with the brightest of Great Britain's youth, her future statesmen, diplomatists, men of scholarship and men of affairs.

The President.

HERE is a political significance in the warmth of the South's welcome of the president which close observers will be quick to note. As to the genuineness of that welcome, all reports agree. It was not manufactured; it was spontaneous.

Our Progression of Prosperity

THE PROGRESSION of prosperity under the publican generalship is still marching along. It is apparent never-ending. It is a banner of "Progress to American Industries" still flies the waving breeze, and the men in the ranks are still lustily singing the old marching song.

War Times in Kentucky.

One afternoon in 1862, a group of citizens sat in front of the village grocery, discussing the war news, which came by newspaper from the north and by "grapevine" from the south.

It Caused Trouble.

A certain Tomanda girl owns a kodak and delights in taking pictures. Her father was sitting by the kitchen stove the other day, and presently the father went outdoors, and the girl came in and sat down in the same chair, and the daughter took her picture also.

A Theological Nose.

"I was once showing a young Japanese around Boston," says a correspondent of the Living Church, "and casually dropped into Trinity church with him. He was at the time a recent convert to Christianity from his own country, and was wide awake to everything connected with American civilization and American Christianity.

ALWAYS BUSY.

Spring and Summer Oxford and Boats that content the mind and comfort the feet. Men's "Always" Busy Oxfords, $3.00. Ladies' "Melba" Oxfords, $2.50.

Outline Studies of Human Nature.

The Moral of It. "I thought," she said, with a plaintive little sigh, "that you were to come home early this evening."

Witty Stage Impromptus.

Nothing was so amusing as a display of presence of mind when something unexpected happens during a performance. In the last act of "Steady Margaret" the opening bill for Miss Amelia Bingham's stock company—which was laid in the abode of Madame Marguerite the medium—just as Miss Bingham stepped on the stage, she was told that she intended to come to her cousin's shop every single day, her dress caught on a nail and torn. Miss Bingham stepped on the stage and said: "I am so glad to see you, my dear, but I must go to my shop."

primarily to increase his product, but that the strain of competition forces him into extensions that he may thereby reduce more and more per ton or per yard these fixed charges, upon which the safety of his capital depends.

Sorry He Rushed On.

The sanctity of the Banquet Club of the Hotel Alms is not to be invaded. The club is composed of a number of staid business and retired business men, guests of the hotel, who smoke their perfect and discuss all sorts of subjects, from stocks and wars to earth and Mars, and many a weighty question has been settled in the little smoking room after dinner.

Stories of Jackson.

In his "Memories of a Hundred Years" now being published in the Outlook, Dr. Edward Everett Hale recounts some of the tales which were circulated in Boston in relation to the great and good President. He says: "I remember very well the anecdote in which Mrs. Jackson was supposed to give an account of a long fever of which, I think, she died. It was declared and believed in northern circles that she died in the General's arms, and who protested to the best of her ability, and I should not tell the story but to record the sentiment of a true lady, a relative of my own, who had seen all the elegance of the best courts of Europe, and who was protected to Mrs. Jackson was a lady through and through in breeding as in daily manners. My friend related the anecdote which I have just given as illustration of the bitterness of war-torn life at that time. On the other hand, if one story can be received at the distance of one person from the spot of which the story is told, the story which I will now record is true. I was a daughter of a Massachusetts senator told me that in her younger life she went with her father to one of the regular dinners at the white house. General Jackson himself took her out to the dinner table. There was some talk about the light of the table, and the general said to her, 'The chandelier does not burn well.' She was so determined that she would not be mistaken that she pressed not to hear him and asked him what he said. To which his distinct reply was, 'The chandelier does not burn well.'"
