ACADEMY—Harry Jenkins. Afternoon and night.

"Maid Marian."

The Bostonians were greeted at the Lyceum last night with one of the largest, most representative and most demonstrative audiences of the present season. At the conclusion of the performance it was also one of the most satisfied audiences of the season. True to their reputation the Bostonians gave an entertainment of the highest order of merit.

"Maid Marian," their new opera is called a sequel to "Robin Hood." It could with equal propriety be labelled a "re-write" of "Robin Hood." Every one of the songs that made the original famous is matched, not to say imitated, in the sequel. There is a drinking song for "Brown October Ale"; a sentimental contralto solo for "O, Promise Me," a glee for "See the Little Lambkins Play," and a sprightly thing in which Crusaders slap their shields with their swords, which can not help but bring memories of the "Tinkers' chorus." The "companion" songs of the sequel, suffice it to say, can not help but please, but they are the more pleasing when one has not heard "Robin Hood."

"Ho! For the Greenwood," a male chorus; "Love May Come and Go," a quintette, for soprano, alto, base, baritone and tenor; a spirited march song with which the second act closes; the contralto solo, "Tell Me Again Dear Heart," a soprano love song, and the duet, "True Love is Not for a Day," are the principal numbers. Each is sung in a manner most creditable even for the Bostonians. No finer chorus has been brought here in comic opera. It is full, evenly balanced and capable of producing volume without a yell or a harsh note. It is a trained company of vocalists.

All that the most exacting comic opera can demand of a prima donna is in the possession of Miss Grace Van Studdiford, who is this year heading the Bostonians as "Maid Marian." Her soprano is flawless, her dramatics truly artistic and she is a very handsome woman. In her love song which is of the grand opera plane and her duet with Robin Hood, she was most effective. The audience it seemed could not hear enough of her sweet, rich and flexible voice. The principal contralto, Adele Ratter, as Alana-Dale, essays the work that made Jessie Bartlett Davis famed, and gives promise of becoming quite as famous as her predecessor. Although not of the personal proportions of the usual contralto, her voice has rare strength, depth and velveteen. Belle Harper as Lady Vivian, is a winsome young woman with a surpassingly sweet soprano. Her solos were among the most enthusiastically received of the principal numbers.

W. H. McDonald, as Little John, was given the warmest reception of any of the male singers. His baritone is as pleasing as ever. Frank Rushworth, a young tenor, as Robin Hood, is an exceptionally good singer and good looker even for a Bostonian tenor-lover. The basso, Allen C. Hinckley, who sang Will Scarlet, was not given opportunity to prove that he is all that is claimed for him. His one solo, however, showed that while he is very good he is not Cowles. George B. Frothingham's Friar Tuck is not made a musical part, and falls far short of being comic. Henry Clay Barnabee in his old character of the Sheriff of Nottingham, however, supplies all the comedy required. He borrows just a bit at times from "Foxy Quiller," but on the whole his witticisms are good and of the kind that appeals to the best intelligence.

The costuming and setting of the three acts is very elaborate. The first scene represents a park surrounding the castle of the Earl of Huntington. The second is a Crusaders camp outside the city of Ace in Palestine. The third is the great banqueting hall of Huntington castle.

Only in the first act is the greenwood flavor of "Robin Hood" preserved. The story opens at Robin Hood's castle with Robin gone with the Crusaders, and the Sheriff of Nottingham conspiring against him, with a view of disgracing him in the eyes of his betrothed Maid Marian. The second act has the old greenwood retainers of Robin Hood arriving at the Crusaders camp and greeting their chief. Maid Marian had come with them to find out for herself if the Sheriff of Nottingham told the truth when he reported that Robin was false to her and his king, and essayed to prove it with forged letters. The sheriff follows in disguise, betrays the camp into the hands of the Saracens and returns to England with Maid Marian leaving Robin Hood and his followers captives in the hands of the infidels.

The third act has a Yuletide festival for an opening and closes with Robin Hood and the rest returning in time to prevent the forced marriage of Maid Marian to the sheriff's adopted son and to oust the impostor from his estate. There is just enough interest in the plot to make satisfactory filling in between the songs.

Will F. Burke.

One of the specialties to be presented between the acts at the Academy of Music tonight is a musical sketch written by Will F. Burke for the McCann family.

Mr. Burke will also be heard in several of his best illustrated songs.

"A Runaway Girl."

One of the many excellent features of the production of the musical comedy, "A Runaway Girl," which will be seen Friday night at the Lyceum theater in this city, is the magnificent carnival scene in the last act. The locality is supposed to be near the historic canal in Venice. Great scope is allowed in this scene and is taken full advantage of by the management. Some exceedingly handsome and picturesque costumes are worn by the participants, and a very entertaining and decidedly interesting carnival of dance and music is introduced.

Flower girls, gondoliers, brigands, peasants, soldiers and sabot girls, all dressed in appropriate costume, and a beautifully painted set of scenery serve to make a grand picture during the action of the principals in this strikingly original scene. Seats go on sale this morning.

STAGE NOTES.

Gilbert Parker has sold the American rights of "The Right of Way" to Charles Frohman. The latter intends to star William Faversham in the piece.

Elizabeth Tyree has sailed for London and will return early in the fall to take up rehearsals for the play, "Gretna Green," in which she will star next season.
