FAR REACHING IN ITS EFFECT

IMPORTANCE OF THE ARDMAN INJUNCTION CASE.

Decision to Be Arrived at by Judge Edwards Will Have Not Only a National But International Bearing—Defense Sets Up the Claim That No Latin Bishop Can Discipline a Greek Priest, the Metropolitan of Lemberg and Not the Pope Being Supreme.

The development of the defense in the Rev. John Ardman injunction case discloses that Judge Edwards will be called upon to decide a question of not only national, but international importance. This question has been in the air for eight years, but never before was brought up for adjudication.

When the United Greek Catholic church, commonly known as the Ruthenian rite, united with the Roman Catholic church in 1804, it was agreed, among other things, that priests of the Greek church should subject themselves to the bishops of the dioceses in which they might locate, be they Latin or Greek prelates.

The United States, as far as the Greek church is concerned, is a missionary country and has no Greek bishops. The Latin bishops claim that a Greek priest coming to this country must accept the jurisdiction of the Latin bishops of the diocese in which they locate. Rev. Ardman and many other Greek priests resist this claim, alleging that the article of the union referring to this subject is not effective in a missionary country and that they can officiate here under the faculties given them by a Greek bishop of the old country. In support of their resistance these Greek priests aver that it was stipulated in the articles of union that the pope was acknowledged as the head of their church only in matters pertaining to faith and doctrine, and that in the matter of discipline the Metropolitan of Lemberg was to be supreme.

RECEIVED HIS FACULTIES. Rev. Ardman, as explained at length yesterday, applied for and received faculties from Bishop Hoban. He claimed, however, that he did so without the knowledge or consent of his congregation and that when he learned it was against the wishes of his parishioners that he should be under the jurisdiction of the Latin bishop, he requested Bishop Hoban to strike his name from the rolls.

Bishop Hoban's testimony was to the effect that Rev. Ardman was called upon to subject himself to discipline for writing an anarchical article condoning the crime of Czolgoach, and when in response to a summons to appear for trial he asked to be stricken from the roll of diocesan priests, the bishop excommunicated him.

The defense opened yesterday with the testimony of a former pastor, Rev. Dr. W. J. Slemmowicz, and a number of the present members of the congregation, who told that it was the purpose of the church to remain free from the jurisdiction of the Latin bishop, and that it is a right of the Greek churches to call and release their own pastors without consulting the hierarchy. Then followed the testimony of a number of Greek priests from various places, in which it was set forth that they came here as missionary priests with faculties from Greek bishops of the old country, and that they never recognized the Latin bishops of this country, although the latter in every instance sent them faculties. All of them admitted, however, that they received and never surrendered these faculties.

MERELY ACCEPTED THEM. One of them, Rev. John Konstantavitch, explained that he received the faculties by mail from the late Bishop McGovern, of Harrisburg, and accepted them, as he put it: "Just as you would a complimentary ticket to the opera house."

Rev. Konstantavitch went on to relate, in answer to questions by Mr. Hand, that he was ordained by Sylvester, Cardinal Simbratovich, Metropolitan of Lemberg, in Gallatia, and dispatched by him as a missionary priest to the United States, armed with faculties from one of the Gallatian bishops of the Greek church. He received faculties from Bishop McGovern, but did not by any word or act acknowledge the jurisdiction of the Latin bishop. He believed that the Latin bishop had no jurisdiction over him, and in conformity to this belief continued to act under the faculties he brought with him to this country without concerning himself about the unsolicited faculties received from Bishop McGovern.

On cross-examination, by Mr. Martin, the witness admitted that the Metropolitan of the Greek church was appointed by the pope. He also told that Rev. Ardman was ordained and commissioned in the same manner and by the same prelates that ordained and commissioned him.

WOULD NOT ACT UNDER THEM. Rev. Stephen Mokar, of Mt. Carmel, told a story similar to that of the preceding witness regarding his ordination, delegation and inuring of the faculties sent him by Bishop McGovern. He explained that he refused to accept the faculties given him by the Latin bishop because they were not in accord with the usages, customs and discipline of the Greek church.

Rev. A. Bronchefski, of Hartford, Conn., who, like the others, was sent here by the Metropolitan of Lemberg, told that after he had been pastor of a Greek church in Hartford for seven months, Bishop Tierney, of the diocese of Hartford, sent him faculties, which he had not sought and which he declined to act under, being of the opinion that the faculties given him by the Greek bishop in Gallatia were sufficient for him in this country.

Rev. Nucholas Poderfickl, of Jersey city, testified to being in the same class as the preceding witnesses regarding ordination and commission, and that he had refused to recognize the faculties sent him by the bishop of Newark. The rules of his church, he said, prescribed that when a priest was transferred from one diocese to another, he must receive a release from the one bishop's jurisdiction before he can accept the jurisdiction of another. He was given faculties by the Greek bishop and sent out as a missionary. If it were not that his church intended he should continue under the jurisdiction of the Gallatian bishop, it would not have given him faculties, but rather sent him to this country to receive faculties from a bishop here. Mr. Hand next proceeded to qualify the witness as an expert authority on the history and agreements of the union between the Roman and Greek churches. The witness said he had studied it while in the gymnasium—the preparatory school. It was part of the regular course of each of the four years at his university; one whole year had been given up to its special study, and more than 100 different books bearing on this subject had been thoroughly read by him.

SOME TEST QUESTIONS. Attorney Martin thought to test the witness' knowledge and asked Bishop Hoban to suggest some question to be put to him. The bishop whispered something to Mr. Martin and the latter addressing the witness, said: "Who prescribed the regulations governing the marriage of a Greek Catholic to a Roman Catholic?"

The witness looked up at the ceiling, bit his under lip, fidgeted about for awhile, and then protested he did not understand the question. Mr. Martin repeated it. The witness shrugged his shoulders, and, after a few moments, told Interpreter Martin Woyshner to make it plain for him, that he understood the language, but not the sense of the question. Once more Mr. Martin put the question. The audience had come to realize that the expert was "stuck," and then a titter ran along the line. The witness was nettled, and suddenly bending forward, asked in excited tones, "Tell me who gives Polish priests the right to marry Greeks. I propound that question?"

Mr. Martin said, "That will be all," and the examination ended.

LIST OF FACULTIES. Bishop Hoban was on the stand for further cross-examination during the afternoon, and produced, at Mr. Hand's request of yesterday, a printed copy of the faculties given priests.

Later in the day, one of the Greek priests, Rev. Mokar, was called to show how these faculties are not in accord with the rites of the Greek church. When asked by Mr. Hand to point out in what they differed, he ran his eye over the various clauses, and then said: "Here, for instance, No. 21, Rosarium ut non," etc., etc. "There, you see, is a difference."

"Did you get that?" Judge Edwards smilingly inquired of Stenographer Costan. "Every syllable," truthfully, more or less, responded the stenographer. The hearing was attended yesterday by a crowd which filled every seat in and out of the enclosure.
