ATTRACTIONS TODAY.

ACADEMY—Charles Leybourne's Ban Ton Stock company. Matinee and night. SEAR—Blue Blood Burlesques. Afternoon and night.

Modjeska and James.

With two such eminent artists as Madame Modjeska and Louis James a very commendable presentation of the "Merchant of Venice" might be expected, and in a large and fashionable audience at the Lyceum, last night, this expectation was fully realized.

Considering that Modjeska is more naturally fitted for roles almost the diametric opposite of a young, blithe, mischievous girl, who could not be serious even in the contemplation of the most serious incident of her life—the outcome of the lottery by which she was to be matched—and who in a twinkling planned to save her husband's friend by what, when analyzed, is a far, it is no small tribute to her art to merely say she was an acceptable Portia. But it can be said that she was more than this. Her art hides the handicaps that would be almost unmountainable obstacles to success in one less artistic, and the outlook, for the money, is wide to feel that the handicaps she knows are there, after all, chimerical. There is no gaudiness that in a tragic Shakespearean role Modjeska would be better, but it is a pleasurable thing to witness this new evidence of the art of this unadorned woman.

As Shylock—his most pretentious effort—James proves himself what it was oft prophesied he would be, one of those who will be remembered as having a place in the forefront of American actors. A striking evidence of the triumph he possesses is found in the fact that he essays a Shylock of his own, not an original Shylock altogether, when the accepted Shakespearean commentaries are laid in mind, but original as compared with what other actors' conceptions of Shylock are and have been. James makes him a rather robust character in his every feature. Physically he is depicted as being yet far removed from the decrepitude to which Kean makes him so closely approach, the stooped body being wholly wanting and his hair and beard being still black, with only a tingling and streaking of gray—James also gives him more fire in the strenuous passages, and in the scene with Tubal, in which he hears the alternating good and bad news, the extreme emotions are not given the wide range so common in their portrayal. This concept of making Shylock a comparatively robust character and maintaining him as such, serves to give opportunity for striking contrast at his exit from the story when he is reduced to the most abject condition that can be conceived for one of his nature. Mr. James' depiction of the retreat from the court room was the most generally applauded bit of his work.

The supporting company was exceptionally good. It included Alexander Cartleton, as Antonio; Wadsworth Harris, as Bassanio; Norman Hackett, as Gratiano; Girard Cameron, as Lorenzo; Thomas Coffin Cooke, as Gobbo; Mrs. Apple James, as Jessica, and Mrs. Evans-Welles, as Nerissa.

The Blue Bloods.

The Blue Bloods Extravaganza company opened a three days' engagement at the Star theater yesterday afternoon and presented a show which is considerably above the average of the performances which have been given in this house during the past season. What is designated on the programme as "Wing-Ting," a Chinese opera in two acts and four scenes, is presented.

It merely furnishes an excuse for the introduction of a number of specialties—some very good, some not so good and some others. Day after day the real name "Nolan" gave some exceedingly clever impersonations, and Japanese and German ballets with appropriate songs pleased the audience immensely.

James F. Sullivan and Sallie Huested gave a noisy and rather vulgar sketch, and the impressive illustrated song artist was on hand in the person of Carl Anderson. Charles K. Harris' latest, "The Tea That Brakes," was sung by him, and this composer in this song has quite surpassed all his previous efforts in maudlin sentimentality. It was very beautifully illustrated in all the colors of the rainbow. James E. Cooper and Mae Reynolds could be excused were it not for two or three jokes that they sprung.

"The Bonnie Brier Bush."

Mr. J. B. Stoddart in "The Bonnie Brier Bush" is the attraction of the Lyceum Saturday matinee and night. All of those who have heard of the favorite old actor's success in New York in this, his new piece, as well as those who remember him in previous plays will look forward with great anticipation to his appearance here.

The advance sale of seats and boxes began yesterday morning, and the demand indicates that great audiences will be present at both performances.

STAGE NOTES.

The Bon Ton company presented "A Man of Mystery" at the Academy of Music last night. The bill for today follows: Afternoon, "An American Hero's" night, "Chattanooga, '61." The London Sketch says: "Sir Henry Irving, who has returned to England in the best health he has ever known, has not, I am officially informed, ever had any hint of producing a 'Dante' play by Sardou or any one else—at least not for many years past. Sir Henry is much amused at the persistent rumors which have been started concerning this 'Dante' drama. 'Sir Henry will, I am assured, produce no new play

COLES' FOR MAY.

Men are born and men are dying. Thousands come—not one can stay. Time is swift, his wheels are flying. Never ceasing, night or day.

Here we are again at the merry month of May. The planetary conditions are not very favorable for a quiet and peaceful month. Old Red-warrior Mars is sidetracked in sign Taurus, the bull. He will stir up strife and keep the whole world in a constant state of excitement. Old Mother Earth is passing through the house of friends; therefore, if there is any tendency to bring about a peaceful feeling among the laboring class now is the time to adjust their claims and be at peace. Earth will be opposed by the house of children, therefore it will be well for parents to guard their children, as everyone should pay strict attention to their health during the low ebb days of this month, as found in Storms and Signs for May. Many sudden deaths will occur this month. Vegetables will also receive affliction from the microbes, locust, etc., that are coming.

SPLENDID ENTERTAINMENT.

An excellent entertainment under the auspices of the Epworth League of the Elm Park Methodist Episcopal church, was conducted in the parlors last night and an audience large in numbers was apparently well pleased.

A number of pretty tableaux were effectively presented. The subjects were varied and included a street scene entitled "The Booback," a quantity pretty picture, "The Old-Fashioned Girl," and the Reveries of a Twentieth Century Bachelor." Philip Warren's splendid baritone was heard in two selections, and Mrs. Eara H. Connell sang delightfully. Recitations were cleverly given by Miss Osenbach, and Miss Long rendered a violin solo.
