ACK GREEN was a reporter on a London paper, and in that capacity he solved the riddle of the celebrated Sykes robbery case, story was printed from one end of the country to the other, and it made a hero of Green, especially as he received a slight wound from a stray sullet in the fracas that took place when Sykes and his confederates were arrested.

His injury won him a month's vacation, which he resolved to spend at his home in Kent. Ashford was not a very lively place in the winter, but Green was not looking for recreation. He wanted to see Ethel Watson, who lived in that village, and who was, in Jack's opinion, the sweetest and smartest girl in the world.

On the afternoon of his seventh day in Ashford Green drove up to the Watson house to take Ethel for a drive. There had been a fine full of snow the night before. Ethel was standing by the gate talking with Joe Sawyer, who also was in love with her. Sawyer, who also was in love with her, but didn't dare to say so openly. Joe was lawyer, and the only one in Ashford who had any practice,
"Hello, Sherlock Holmes!" said the lawyer. "Have you heard the news?" "No," answered Green sourly,

"I'm really surprised," said Sawyer You should have deducted it frem

the state of the atmosphere and the price of potatoes." "I haven't," responded Green. "Justice Hawkin's house has been robbed," said Ethel. "And I think it's positively providential that you're Green looked at Ethel, and he saw that she expected him to perform great miracles. He looked at Sawyer and raw something quite different.

"Get in here, both of you," said Green, "and we'll see what we can do." They drove to the justice's house. The robbery had been discovered by old Mrs. Gubbins, a life-long dependent of the judge's family, who went through the house three or four times a week to see that all was well, but did not live there. She had reported the case to the local police-a day and a night watch-man-and these functionaries were present, with a dozen of the neighbors, when he mantelpiece. From this room he passed through all the others in the house, a slow procession following him. Finally he led them to the starting point, the broad hall, and there he gat down upon the stairs and looked at his watch, which he had consulted occasionally in the course of his stroll. "Nineteen minutes and a half." sald Green. "Mr. Jones, I believe you are a deputy sheriff of the county as well as a constable of the village. 1 will make my report to you, sir. This robbery was committed by two men who do not live in Ashford and who are not here at present. Where they are we will consider later.

Green and his companions arrived. Green consulted his watch, and then he slowly walked into the hall, where the old-fashioned safe built into the wall gaped emptily. He glanced around with listless eye while everybody watched him. Then he walked into the ferson avenue.

"One of them is about six feet tall and rather slender. He has red hair, but is bald on the front part of his cranium. He were a long black overJ. A. "The prints of his overshoes show it the dust on the floor of the kitchen closet. The print of his finger is in the dust on top of that table, or was be fore Joe Sawver sat down on it."

"There wasn't any dust here-not speck!" exclaimed Sawyer, jumping off the table. "It depends on the eye," responded Green calmly. "To continue: The other robber was short thick-set and dark. He wore a pea jacket and a fur cap. He had a heavy black beard; which may, however, be false. I cannot tell from the single hair which I found upon a piece of bread in the kitchen until I have examined it with a microscope. He was an Irishman.' "Great Scott!" exclaimed the constable, "How do you know that?" "From his method of knocking out the shes from his pipe," replied Green.

'Irishmen have a peculiar way of doing it. I have not time to explain it in de-"They carried a satchel something

At 9 o'clock the next morning Jones received this message from Scotland
