WOUNDED WHILE ARRESTING FISHERMEN

Eugene Swingle, a Farmer of South Canaan, Shot in the Side During a Scuffle. Frank Moran, of the "Bush" Whom He Was Trying to Arrest for Fishing on a Private Pond, Was Shot Through Hand. Arrests to Follow.

A fishing trip made by a number of oung men from the "bush" section of Jarbondale township to Lake Quinsigamond, beyond South Canaan, Wayne county, had a disastrous ending yesterday morning.

Eugene Swingle, a farm owner in that section, who acts as watchman about the lake was shot in the side. though not dangerously. Frank Moran, one of the fishermen has a bullet wound in his hand. The wounds were inflicted during a scuffie, while Swingle was endeavoring to arrest Moran for tresspassing on the lake. Who is responsible for the shooting has not been determined. It was Swingle's revolver and he had it drawn when he approached Moran. During the mix-up, following Moran's resentment of Swingle. times. One of the bullets struck Swingle in the left side. Striking a buckle, its course was deflected and it was sent scraping along his ribs. The ball may have left the body as Dr. A. B. Stevens' probe failed to locate it Swingle is in bed. Moran's injury is

After the shooting Moran skipped, Constable Neary, however, got assuraneves from his folks last night that he would give bail before some justice of the peace in this city. Constable Robinson, of Canaan, arrested one of the fishermen, Anthony O'Boyle, but released him last night. Michael Quinn and Daniel Corcoran, two others of the party, were arrested by Constable Neary and gave bail last night before Alderman Jones.

The fishing party was made up of young men whose homes are in the "Bush." The shutting down of the mines was taken advantage of to spend fishing over Canaan way. They left for Lake Quinsigamond, which is in Canaan, about three-quarters of a mile south of Robinson's pond. It was owned formerly by Eugene Swingle, the man who was shot, and it is still sometimes called Swingle's pond. Swingle sold the lake to the late J. H. Steell, of Scranton, whose family spends the summer months there. Since the transfer of the lake. Swingle has kept a watchful eye about the place. Particularly for tresspassing fishermen. When he observed the crowd of Carbondale township fishermen at the pond yesterday morning, he had warrants sworn charging them with trespassing and catching pickerel out of season.

In company with Constable A. J. Robinson, Swingle went towards the lake where the fishermen were as busy as only fishermen can be. The consta ble nabbed and held onto one man. Swingle went around the hill to interrupt the others who were hastilly making away. He singled out Moran, because he carried a bag filled with fish. When Swingle seized Moran there was a tussle. Swingle had a revolver n his hand, which Moran endeavored to get away from him, the former says, milts he gave Swingle a severe pumet-Three shots were fired while the strug- ing. Moran tain, but the "Bush" men's speed and enough to weaken him so as to give the fact that Swingle needed attention the former a chance to flee. Moran caused the pursuit to be abandoned.

Constable Neary and Moran were apprised of the happening, the latter be- that it might be again freely directed ing called by Swingle's nephew. Both upon him. went over the mountain. Before evening Constable Neary had ten of the party and had the assurance from flesh made an ugly hole. Yesterday Moran's folks that he would surrender. The others will be apprehended in a day or two.

Moran Blames Swingle.

Frank Moran who was in the mixup with Swingle tells quite a different story to the one gathered by the constubles in South Canaan. His story makes Swingle the aggressor, charging that the latter commenced firing at the crowd, as he approached where they stood,

Moran gives his version of the occurrence with much earnestness and with some feeling towards Swingle for having, as he claims, fired on the crowd without any show of opposition or force on its part. Swingle, Moran says when he advanced towards him and his companlons, began to fire and they endeavored to shield themselves and Moran's hand. In an Instant, Swingle Jordan. was close to Moran. William Douglas died at Emergency rospital about midnight last night. His death was the consequence of injuries to his foot sustained while at work as a brakeman on the Delaware & Hudson railroad, several weeks ago. The accident occurred near the Moosic station of the Delaware & Hud-Douglas was on top of a box car and was not in a position to see the engineer. The train started and parted suddenly. Douglas was thrown from his high place and landed with his feet against the rails. The cars did derly Mine. James Horan in His not pass over the foot, but it got squeezed badly. Douglas was removed in a few days to Emergency hospital. It was the hope of his physicians to preserve the foot from amputation and treatment to this end was persisted in. It did not avail, however, for septle poisoning developed and Douglas became reduced to a grave condition a few weeks ago. Since then he battled bravely for his life, enduring the most intense sufferings. Sunday the terribly diseased foot was amputated, the final vitality was too low and he rallied only temporarily.
