Discussion of the Peace Terms Between the English and Boers—Effects of the Storm—Other News Notes

An interesting discussion of the peace terms between the English and Boers was held at the Plymouth Congregational church last evening, and was enjoyed by a large audience, many of whom were ladies. The speakers were John J. Davies and John M. Edwards, of the First Welsh Baptist church men's league, and Charles E. Daniels and John R. Thomas, of the Plymouth church men's league.

D. D. Evans, president of the latter league, was chairman of the evening, and was assisted by the secretary, Tallie M. Evans. A song service preceded the discussion, and was led by Richard Phillips, of the Sherman avenue mission, with Miss Edna D. Evans as accompanist. Prayer was offered by Prof. James R. Hughes.

Each of the speakers was allowed fifteen minutes to express his views on the subject. "Are the Terms of Peace Recently Concluded Between the British and the Boers Just to Both Parties?" John J. Davies opened the discussion, and said it was a hard matter to get four men to agree on a subject of this character, and harder to get four women to agree, nevertheless, he was of the opinion that the terms were very magnanimous.

He did not attempt to discuss the merits or demerits of the war just ended, but thought the peace terms were just to the Boers, particularly so from the fact that eight of the nine peace commissioners were Boers. The English government displayed a Christian feeling in the adjustment of the struggle, and the judgment of the whole world is favorable to them for such an amicable settlement.

Mr. Davies read the terms of peace and commented on them as he read, and but little objection, he said, could be made to them, the only thing being the acknowledgment by the Boers of King Edward as their sovereign, but for them not to acknowledge him would only mean the fight over again.

Another thing, he said, in the signing of the Dutch language in the schools there, was the best evidence of England's magnanimity.

England has established a precedent in this matter, he said, for which they deserve great credit, and the terms generally are magnanimous and generous.

Mr. Daniels, the second speaker, thought the question has many sides to it, but the people should not lose sight of the fact that the Boers struck the first blow in the conflict, which lasted for so long, and now receive very courteous treatment at the hands of their conquerors. In his judgment the Boers received fair, equitable, honorable merciful and magnanimous treatment at the hands of the English government.

To be governed by a progressive power, he said, is much better for them than guarding still, as has been their experience for many years, and in his opinion future generations will rise up and call the war just ended blessed. It has cast aside the cloud of Boer retrogression, yet allowed them to keep their racial identity, yet there is no question of the supremacy of England in South Africa. England has only done what other nations would do under similar circumstances, but there could be no more favorable conditions granted than these.

John M. Edwards read a compiled statement of facts concerning the Boers and their settlement in South Africa, which proved very interesting and instructive. It contains statistics from authoritative sources, treating with the various conflicts in that country, and he characterized the peace terms as "a judgment in England in King Edward as their sovereign."

After a solo by John Phillips, Prof. James R. Hughes and Hy. A. Parsons expressed their opinions on the subject, and the lady friends of the Plymouth League served refreshments to their guests. The league will hold another meeting one week from next Monday evening.

Effects of the Storm.

Fortunately for West Scranton property owners, the damages resulting from yesterday's storm were not very severe, as far as could be learned. Those who suffered most were residents in the vicinity of Ninth streets and the intersecting streets below Main avenue, where many cellars were flooded, also the lumber yards of M. C. Ansley and Washburn, Williams & Co. The sewer basins in many localities were totally inadequate to accommodate the rush of water, and in consequence the overflow spread out over the streets and gutters, forming large pools in many places. The surface waters were carried off, however, later in the night, and but few evidences of the storm were then visible.

A number of the houses in West Park had the cellars flooded, particularly the residence of Charles Stetter, on Brown avenue, and the steps in front of the house were also washed out of place. North Main avenue, in front of the park, was also flooded over, owing to the lack of sewer facilities.
