Vitrified Brick Pave Laid On Hyde Park Avenue Three Years Ago in a Deplorable Condition.

Three years ago the Alcatraz Paving company laid a vitrified brick pavement on Hyde Park avenue, from Lafayette street to Division street. The bricks were laid on a sand base and the pavement was guaranteed for five years.

Three years have elapsed, and the street from Lafayette to Jackson is a sight to behold. Commencing with the Merrifield lot, on the left-hand side, and extending to Price street, the bricks have sunk half the width of the street. At the intersection of Price street there is a hole in the pavement some ten feet long and two feet wide, with a depth of ten to fourteen inches, and at this point in the middle of the street is a basin filled with mud and water, some eighteen inches in diameter and twenty inches deep.

A wheelman or horse were to strike the hole just right, the consequences would indeed be serious, as a wheelman might be thrown from his wheel and killed, or a horse break a leg.

From Price street to the Franklin engine barn the bricks are also sunk, and in front of the barn the whole pavement is in a most deplorable condition. Several times while the pavement was in course of construction heavy rain storms occurred and the water washed the sand from beneath the bricks and honeycombed the whole thing along the sides. Again, after the pave was completed, the company mixed weak cement and slushed it over the bricks to fill up the spaces between bricks, but instead of sinking in, the cement merely formed a crust on top, which travel soon wore off, with the result that water sinks in all the crevices.

Alderman's Court.

Gertie Jones, of Scranton, swore out a warrant on Tuesday before Alderman Noone, charging Mary Jane Matthews, of 727 Scranton street, with assaulting her, jumping on her face, and giving her several stiff body blows. The Matthews woman was arrested and taken before the alderman on Wednesday, and although she admitted all the charges, the alderman was compelled to discharge her, because of the non-appearance of the Jones woman.

Margaret Hodges, of 530 Decker's court, swore out a warrant before Alderman Kellow, charging Annie Williams, of 1523 Bulwer street, with assault and battery. The alleged assault took place on July 14, when the defendant was arraigned before the alderman, who was held in $300 bail, which was furnished by Reese D. Morgan, of North Elmwood avenue.
