A Boy Arrested.

Joseph Calabreskey, of 127 Chestnut street, appeared before Alderman Dayls yetserday and swore out a warrant for the arrest of Eddie Jenkins of Aswell court. He claims that the Jenkins' boy struck his son. Charles on the head with a stone. Both boys are 13 years old. At the hearing held last evening it developed that the boys were trying to see which could throw a stone the longest distance and while enjoying the sport Calabreskey's sons' head became mixed up with the stone. The alderman did not think the charge was supported by the evidence and so discharged the case.

THE RETURN OF THE BIRDS.

They Begin Their Twittering Flight Southward in September.

For the lover of birds September is a month in which every hour at the desk or in the office is sorely begrudged. Once again is the shrubbery filled with the old friends whose acquaintance was made early in the spring. In August the search for birdlife was ofttimes most discouraging, and it would seem that the feathered folk had deserted all the dear old haunts. But in this month behold the feathered hosts once more. The first cool weather brings a wave of the little winged sprites, most of them being the warblers. They are on their way south now, and to the amateur the new dresses of many of them make recognition a bit difficult. A great number are young birds which have not yet at-Bella Harris, Edith Richards, Carrie tained the plumage of maturity. Then, donned their traveling gowns, which are much soberer than the gorgeous spring songs are lacking now, but the familiar twitterings and characteristic birds are found. The fall flight is in reality one of the most interesting phases of bird study. He who would know his feathered friends thoroughly who was the guest of her uncle and must be abroad with note-book and ount, Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Jeffers, of pencil daily, for many of the birds tarry but for a day or two on their

> Species which were by no means common in the spring will often be seen in unexpected numbers during the fall migration, as if they varied their routes of travel between the limits of their habitat. Those who dwell along studying a phase of bird life, the tragedy of migration, which those further inland know nothing of. At no season of the year do so many of the feathered folk come to untimely death by dashing against the light houses as in the September flight. Beyond question this in part is due to the facthat a large percentage of the migrants are making their first long journey Then, again, September nights are inclined to be foggy. The result is that the glare of the big seacoast bea cons seemingly confuses the feathered travelers, and thousands dash them selves to death. From September 1 to 10 many sojourners of the summer will take their departure for warmer climes. The worm-eating warbler and the blue-winged warbler are among the first to depart. With them will go the rough-winged swallow, the orchard oriole and the Arcadian fly-catcher. During these same early days the black-polled warbler, the Connecticut warbler and the Lincoln sparrow are likely to arrive from the north, tarrying briefly on their way south. During the next ten days we may say good-bye to the purple martin, the Baltimore oriole, the yellow-breasted chat, and that lit tle nugget of living gold, the yellow warbler. At this time in the low. damp meadows and marshes that erratic flyer who is at once a delight and an exasperation to the sportsman, Wilson's snipe, is to be found. He also is a transient. The blue-headed vireo, the olive backed thrush and Bicknell's thrush will also make a fleeting visit. September 20-30 sees the departure and arrival of many old acquaintances. The Louisiana water-thrush, the veery, the hooded warbler, that pleasant little singer of warm July days, the warbling virso, the wood peewee, the rose breasted grosbeak, the yellow-throated vireo, the kingbird, the crested flycatcher, the humming bird, the little green heron and the common tern all depart for distant lands. At the same time little woodland ponds and quiet waters become tenanted by those marvellously swift yet diminutive ducks, green-winged and blue-winged teal. The American coot will also be found in the sedges. All three of these are but sojourners for a week or two. The golden crowned kinglet and the junco come down from the north to spend the winter. In certain sections the winter wren also comes to take up his abode. The yellow palm warbler, the myrtle warbler, the white-crowned sparrow, the white throated sparrow and the ruby-crowned kinglet also come from the northern districts, and later will seek a more southern lati-Along the seacoast the great tude. broad-winged herring-gull arrives to spend the winter. All through the month the various waders, such as the sand-pipers; the plover, the curlew and the yellow-legs come down in great flocks along the salt marshes, traveling to the south. The flight of these birds is usually heaviest in the early part of the month and by the end of the month only a few belated stragglers are to be seen. The forerunners of the great web-footed tribe begin to for some weeks yet. Thus it is that the bird student who would keep in has returned from a two month's trip touch with the feathered world finds his hours afield in September are all

Making the Home Comfortable.

The days are getting shorter, the long evenings will soon be here, is the home complete in every part? Is it as comfortable and cheery as it might be? Would a new carpet improve the parlor, new wall decorations the library, a china closet the dining room, new curtains the boy's room, or, if grandpah's chair was newly upholstered would it make his life pleasanter? These and hundreds of similar ones must doubtless be answered in every home during the next few weeks. As soon as you have decided upon your Fall home furnishing plans go to

M'KINLEY AND RECIPROCITY

W. E. Curtis in Chicago Record-Herald. President McKinley's ideas of recipro city were very much broader than the treatles now pending in the senate, which were negotiated by John A. Kasson, un-der his direction. Mr. Kasson was re-stricted in his negotiations by section 4 of the Dingley tariff law, which permit ted him to make concessions on very few articles of insignificant character, and no more than 20 per cent, reduction from the regular duties upon them. It is a wonder that he was able to secure any concessions from foreign nations at all, but he showed great skill and shrewdness, and succeded in concluding a set of arrangements which, if they are ever rati-ded, will be of considerable value to the export trade. Speaker Reed, Mr. Ding-ley, Mr. Dalzell, Mr. Payne, Mr. Hopkins. Mr. Tawney and other members of the house who were engaged in framing the Dingley bill did not intend that the reciprocity section should be successful. They knew, or they expected, it would fail. They placed it in the law against their own judgment, being compelled by complex sections and in compiliance with popular sentiment and in compliance with the platform of the Republican national the platform of the Replace convention. They are all high protectionists, and are opposed to reciprocity on principle. They will fight and defeat that and every other proposition that points to the reduction of the present high tariff duties. President McKinley, who was a far-President McKinley, who was a far-sighted man and just as good a pro-tectionist as those I have named, saw that there must be a reduction of duties sooner or later; that the high protection that had been extended over the me-chanical industries was no longer needed, and was a temptation to manufacturers and was a temptation to manufacturers to keep prices up higher than necessary, because they could not suffer from com-petition. In reducing duties, he did not intend to remove protection, but to leave as much as necessary, and use the re-duction as an inducement to foreign nations to make similar reduction in their tariffs upon goods imported from the United States. He believed that this offered an opportunity to secure important concessions in the interest of our foreign trade, and if he had lived he would have orged congress to authorize him to open negotiations to that end. He also felt that we had a right to ask coming and for years have been coming free of Juty into the United States, such as coffee, tea, silk, hides, rubber and other raw materials which we do not produce ourselves. He was in favor of plac-ing a duty upon those articles when imported from nations which impose exorbitant duties upon our goods, as Brazil does, for example. We buy nearly all the coffee raised in Brazil, and admit it free of duty, but Brazil imposes heavy duties upon all of our products, and even charges an export duty upon the coffee she sells to us. President McKinley thought that was unfair and wanted au-thority from congress to tell Brazil that such one-sided trade could not be tolerated any longer; that she must reduce her tariff upon our flour and other pro-ducts, or we would place a duty upon her coffee. He was in favor of this policy when he was in congress, but was not able to secure enough support to carry it
