This was followed by an address by M. J. O'Toole, who spoke of the past work of the society, its aims and benefits. At the conclusion of the address James McHugh gave a vocal solo, Miss Margaret Gibney accompanying.

Mr. Murphy gave an exhibition of back and wing dancing, followed by a well received vocal solo by Miss Kate Connor, and a piano solo by Lucy Sullivan. The programme was brought to a close by an enjoyable vocal solo by William F. Rice.

William W. Evans favored with an excellent solo, after which discussion on the above address was taken up. Prof. James R. Hughes, Luther Lewis, Daniel Evans and John J. Davis entered into the discussion and made it very interesting. The closing remarks were made by the president, Rev. D. D. Hopkins.

An appetizing supper was served in the basement by Mrs. J. B. Stuart and Mrs. William Janser, who gave a strictly German menu. Their culinary efforts were well patronized. The affair was a success from start to finish and much credit is due to the capable committee-men who had charge of the arrangements. They were Messrs. DONE WITH GIRL TYPEWRITERS with me about a month when a theoretical company came along and was going to ship its goods because Liza Eva was sick. My typewriter heard of it and offered her services, and she played the part so well that the company took her along and in four weeks she married the manager and ran the business. The second one got a little too fresh after a week or so, and came to me and said:

One Man Tells Why Henceforth He Will Have the Other Sex Only. From the Detroit Free Press.

"Mr. Blank, you haven't got but one life in coffee, while you've put an h in sugar and left out an e in sheeting."

"Do you object to my way of spelling?"

"I do," she says. "I don't want folks to think I'm typewriting for a saw mill."

"As I wouldn't change, she did; and number three was all right till a young farmer walked in and gained her love while she was typewriting an order for six grindstones and a bale of bed blankets."

"Number four was the best looking girl of all, and she hadn't been in the store three days when my wife says to me across the breakfast table:

"Bas, I think I'll go home on a visit."

"Yes," says I. "And take our seven children."

"Yes."

"And stay a year or two."

"What's the row?" says I.

"Nothing," says she, "only that when a man of your age has to put on a clean shirt and collar every morning it's time he got a homely typewriter or a new family."

"The girl went," continued the merchant, "and I don't think I'll try any more. I'll get some other man who wants a chance to work up and when he ain't typewriting I'll hoist him upstairs to barrel up beans and sack up wool."

CARE OF THE BABY.

Hints for Young Mothers in the Care of Their Children.

From the Woman's Home Companion.

If a young mother is anxious for her wee baby to grow into a healthy, strong child she must follow out hygienic principles; and fortunately for the coming generations more attention is now paid to such things than in the days of our grandmothers. No matter how many servants a woman may have at her command, there are a few duties which a mother should intrust to no one. Two of the most important are the bath and the preparation of the food, providing the infant is artificially fed.

In order to give the bath properly the water should be at the right temperature, and this for a child until he is several months old should be at 98 degrees Fahrenheit. This is gradually lowered until at six months the temperature for a health infant should be 95 degrees Fahrenheit. The water is tested by means of a thermometer which comes for that purpose. If the skin of the infant is very tender and excoriated, a salt bath is of benefit.

The best bath is one made of a large handful of salt to a gallon of water; the bath should be given in a warm room that is free from all draughts.

The articles that are especially needed during the undertaking are a small tin bath tub, a testing thermometer, a sponge, a pair of rubber gloves, a pair of sponges—a small, fine one for the face, and a large, coarser one for the body—a soft towel and talcum baby powder. The mother should wear a flannel or outing flannel apron, with which she can protect the baby during the drying process. The bath should be of short duration, and the body dried quickly, special attention being paid to the creases, that they are not left damp. If it is found that the child looks cold and blue after the bath, the tub should be abandoned for the sponge bath, and the child in a more healthy and vigorous condition. The bath should not be given for an hour after the meal, and it is wise to give it at the same hour every day. Between 9 and 10 o'clock in the morning is usually a convenient time.

When it is time for a baby to take his sleep, see that he is comfortable with an appeased appetite, dry napkins and a quiet, darkened room, and then put him down while awake and allow him to go to sleep by himself; for if once the rocking habit is established, it is hard to break it. A crib with rubber rollers is the best to use. It should have a rather firm hair mattress, and a small pillow for the baby's head. In summer the pillow can be made of hair if desired.

The mistake is often made of putting too much covering over an infant when asleep. It is noticed that the child is restless at the time, try lessening the covering. The clothing of an infant should be loose and comfortable, with all skirts suspended from the shoulders. Flannel blankets are often responsible for colic, due to cold feet. Some mothers may say, "A pinning blanket is used to keep the feet warm," but with a vigorous child the feet will more often be found out than in it. In its place use a skirt and waist in one piece and its advantages will be realized.

The sanitary condition of the nursery is an important matter. First of all it should be the sunniest and best ventilated room in the house, free from plumbing and preferably on the second floor. Babies will not thrive as well where the conditions are neglected, but organic matter will. Ventilation is imperative and can be secured by means of ventilators in the windows. An open fire furnishes the best heat. Avoid gas stoves, which are very deleterious to a child's health. The furnishings of a nursery should be light and of such material that can be easily renovated. A bare floor with a few rugs upon it is much more hygienic than a carpet. The window hangings should be white and the shades green.
