A Mischievous Boy.

Nathan Muneger, of 137 South Seventh street, appeared before Alderman Noone yesterday afternoon and swore out a warrant for the arrest of Mike Sorkaria, of 139 South Seventh stret, on the charge of malicious mischief. Constable Jacobs served the warrant and the boy was immediately given a hearing.

The prosecutor claims that young Sorkaria has been ringing his door hell, throwing stones, rapping on the windows and in other ways making things generally disagreeable. The defendant claimed that he did not do it, that he was not there at the time and also suggested the possibility that the deed had never been done. by the City Treasurer. City taxes are now being received by the city treasurer without an added penalty and will continue to be so received until councils fix some definite date, after which a penalty shall be exacted. About $2,000 a day is now being paid in. Aug, 30 is usually the last day on which taxes may be paid without a penalty unless councils extend the time, which is generally done, but this year the tax duplicates were not received by the treasurer until after that date so that precedent is no guide. It is likely that the date fixed will be about Dec. 15. THE POPE AND THE PLAY.

For The Tribune. For fifteen hundred years, and over, th history of the popes is the record of Christianity. Their influence during a that time was practically paramount i the political and the religious world. The papacy was not exempt from the frailtie of human nature. There were great popes and papal mediocrities; there were good popes, and their lineage altogethe vershadows, if it does not obliterate, the folly, the weakness and the wickedness of the few pontiffs whose careers have sullied the lustre of the throne of the fishermen. A pope is an historical per fishermen. A pope is an historical per-sonage. His reign is open to inspection. He is no more excluded by his character or pontificial associations from secular criticism than the sovereign or states-man engaged in the ordinary affairs of the world. The genins of the Cafholic church lies in its claim to an uninter-rupted continuity through its popes from intervitation to our own day. Without its institution to our own day. Without reverting to what some historians regard as the mythical embellishment of its primitive development, no one can deny that all the sceptres of the modern world are saplings when laid over against the petrified wood that hefts the shepherd's crook of Leo. It is impossible to doubt that amid much misrepresentation and exaggeration, the history of the popes was not always as edifying as it might be, or as politic as it should have been But these matters did not either pass the comprehension or the criticism of those who felt their effects. If we are to obtain a true conception of history, we must place the accidental passions of mankind on the one side, and their settled habits of acting and thinking on th other. When we do this, it will be seen that if the arrogant pretensions of the papacy led to the reformation in the Sixteenth century, it was the conservator of civilization from the fall of the Roman empire until that time, and coincident in time and predisposition of circumstances was the renaissance, which was only possible through the literary and artistic an tiquities which were preserved in vatican and other religious establish-ments, and owed their preservation largely to the patronage of the popes. dance and after a pleasing entertainment refreshments were served and to put on the stage a pope as the principal character of a play. It is needless

Chief James B. Skeoch, presided and to say that such an inspiration could only come to two contemporary authors, Hall Caine and Marie Corelli. If it was not the one, it would inevitably be the other The introduction of a pope has been criticized as improper and irreverent. We confess we cannot see why it should be thought so as a criterion of dramatic art. It is certainly an innovation, but innovation is the measurement of progress in any direction. What should we not give for an ideal pope or Shakespeare, watching over the perturbations of mankind, dominating by his moral power as he so often did the physical oppression of some set the resungent waves of barbarism as dance in the Scranton Bicycle club house last evening. The hall was if he does look like his bust. Mr. Caine's dramatic conception of a eedent for such a preposterous travesty of a pope's elevation along the lines which Mr. Caine adopted. There is a want of decorum and a lack of taste in the delineation which outrages all proportion of the probable or even the possible, in his-torical perspective. Mr. Caine justifies his drama on the score that there is nothing offensive to Christian susceptibilities in the Oberammergau Pasison play. Here in the Oberammergau Pasison play. Here again the author of the Eternal City measures his length with the genius of a representation which has as its framework the most tragic event in the history of mankind, which is transfigured by the passion and death of the Redeemer of the World, which is the solace of Christendom and its hone for the future. thristendom and its hope for the future And again the author of the Passion play, if it had an individual author, was not a playwright with a stage, a proscentum footlights and an orchestra, but a mar idealism is grotesque and mathematical.

"The pope of the play," he says, "is a very noble character. He can be very easily described. His family name was Leone. He began his life as a noble guard. During his career as a soldier, he married a Roman girl. The marriage was distasteful to the family. This caused him to be sent abroad on a diplomatic mission" and the rest follows. There is nothing true to pattern. nothing true to nature or reality in this inartistic stucco work. The Roman non-tiffs have been recruited from every rank of life from swine herds to hereditary associations and religious preposession;
