Events in Europe, since Kossuth came to this country, although apparently adverse, have really favored the cause which Kossuth advocates. The feelings of the people against despotism have been despened, as the danger country that the service of the partiality of a powerful party, and have only to stand still and receive what democratic munificence is waiting nor than men, they submit to fate, and stand devoted victims to the bounty of their friends. I do not be submit to the submit to the friends. censure them, but I condemn the system which enables, ney, almost compels such things to be

Kossuth's evident dejection is said to proceed from the distressing intelligence that the brutes who now rule Austria and ravage Hungary have seized his venerable mother and his sisters, and consigned them to the cells of a Viennese prison. He alluded pathetically to this and news yesterday, in his reply to the invitation of a number of citizens from Alexandria to visit that place. To-morrow he will visit the House of Representatives, where the proceedings, no doubt, will be similar to those in the
