PITTSBURGH GAZETTE.

WELCOME TO THEE, LOVE.

BY LAURA LORRIMER.

When the wind wooes the leaves
With its whispering song,
When the music of dream-land
Is wafted along,
When the air is all radiant
With forms from above,
With the wind and the music,
I'll come to thee, love.

With quiet holy worship,
Beside thee I'll kneel,
And pour out in words
The devotion I feel—
And through moonlight and sunlight
Together we'll rove,
Thus for ever and ever;
I'll come to thee, love.

The stars shall glow round us,
And visions of bliss
Will smile on us gently,
And bless each wild kiss.
Yes, amid the bright forms
Through the dream-land which rove,
Like the south wind of summer,
I'll come to thee, love.

With perfume from flowers
I will bend o'er thy sleep,
With the sky and the wave
A sweet vigil I'll keep.
And as flies forth to meet thee
My soul like a dove,
Seeking out its true dwelling,
Oh, come to ME, love.

CURIOSITIES OF STEAM.—There is a question connected with steam which is more strange than any, and yet we seldom hear it mentioned. It is this: water at 212° gives off steam this steam is totally different in its nature and action from water, and yet it is only 212° also. Why does not the water at 212° all flash in a moment, like gunpowder, into steam—that is, into 1700 times its original bulk? We cannot tell; we only know it does not do it. It has been proven, by Faraday, however, that water, perfectly purged of all atmospheric air, (which all water contains a portion of,) when heated to 300° explodes instantly—that is, all flashes at once into steam. There is another property belonging to water not so universally known to engineers as it should be—namely, all the water in a boiler will become steam in a given time. When subjected to a constant heat and great pressure. If a certain amount of water, at the heat of melted lead be put into a vessel, and a lamp applied to the same, it will be found that, if the time occupied to bring the water from melted ice to 212° (the point where steam commences to be given off) be noted, and the lamp kept at the vessel for 5½ times longer, all the water will be changed into steam: it follows, then, that if a certain amount of heat be applied to water, for 5½ times the period it took to raise the temperature from that of melted ice to the steam point, all the water will be in a state to flash at once into 1700 times its original bulk. A cubic foot of water, converted into steam, occupies 1700 times the space it formerly occupied, if not compressed: and two cubic feet of water, converted into steam, occupy a space of 3,400 feet. The pressure exerted by such an expansive force is tremendous. If frozen water has burst cannons, is it to be wondered at that heat and water bursts boilers? Every engineer should be thoroughly acquainted with all the known chemical and mechanical properties of water and steam. The observations of eminent practical engineers are very valuable: they are situated to observe the phenomena of steam, and there may be many not yet generally known.—Scientific American.
