DIRECTORS—Joseph H. Seal, Edmund A. Souder, John D. Davis, Robert Burton, John R. Penrose, Samuel Edwards, George G. Leiper, Edward Darlington, Jesse R. Burden, William Hacker, Jr., Samuel Sparks, Thomas Robins, Thomas Latimer, Henry Sloan, Jr., Theophilus Paulding, H. Jones Brooke, Henry Hazel, Theophilus Paulding, Jr., Edward Lafourcade, Jr., Hugh Craig, Joseph R. Ingersoll, Thomas Sparks, Charles Seal, J. G. Johnson, Wm. Her. John Sellers, Wm. D. Lewis, Jr., William Harris, a much greater extent of railroad in proportion to their area, than Massachusetts. A much greater necessity exists for them in the former than the latter. They can be constructed at one-half their cost, and must soon do an equal business, but upon capital upon their mileage.

There are in progress and operation in Ohio not far from 2,500 miles of railroad. There are something over 1000 miles in operation, and by the 1st of January next there will be 1,600 miles in operation. Now the present market value of this investment is at least ten per cent above what it has cost the holders of their securities. When we speak of their market value, we mean the prices that would be paid by our most timid and conservative capitalists, who express the greatest fears that we may be going too far. The roads in Ohio that are completed, or on the eve of going into operation, are by all parties pronounced to be of the first class. It is the new projects of that and other States that create the distrust.

We can see no reason why the State of Ohio should not in time, and in fact as soon as they can be reasonably constructed, have a proportionate number of miles of railroad, compared with Massachusetts. Neither do we see any reason why the western States of Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin Iowa, and Missouri, should not have the same number of miles of railroad, their areas compared, as Ohio. They are equally well adapted to these works, and the same necessity exists for their construction, in the former as in the latter. The only element wanting to secure a similar result, in time, which will supply population, and develope their resources to an equal extent. There is no reason, why railroads should not keep pace with the progress of the States in population and wealth, nor why, when they have reached the present position of Ohio, they should not have an equal number of miles of railroad. To effect this result will require a much larger extent of line to be placed under contract than is now in progress.

The area of the States above named is equal to 400,000 square miles. To supply these with railroads, to the same extent that we now find in Ohio, including those in progress, would require 20,000 miles of road. The same ratio that we find in Massachusetts, would require more than 65,000 miles. Now no one acquainted with the resources and wants of the north Western States, and the character of their people, can doubt that in time an equal area will call for an equal extent of line, and that the construction of these roads will proceed with equal pace with their population.

Let us take another illustration, which perhaps will be still more striking and satisfactory. Take the State of Georgia. This State has now not far from 1,000 miles of railroad in operation and has become rich and populous through their influence. She is looked upon at the south as the model Railroad State; as having set the example worthy to be copied by all her neighbors. The roads have been built by her own means. She has borrowed little or nothing from abroad. Her works have been economically built and well managed, and pay large dividends. No one pretends
