remarks upon its business-like calculation of the London Times upon the profit and loss attending the depopulation of Ireland, and the policy upon which that calculation is based.

The Times comforts itself and its Engish readers with the reflection that the Irishman in America is a better customer to the British main in Lecturer than the Irishman in Ireland.

Because our so-called democratic party will perist in a system of low duties which enables the British manufacturer in the markets of the United States. We tell the Irishman that the Times speaks the truth when it says that he is more profitable to Great British mers than in Ireland, and we tell a large majority of them, that they have, mwittingly perhaps, contributed Iargely by their votes to make it so, by supporting a party which, although it calls itself democratic, has far years been playing into the hands of the Engish, by maintaining a system of low advalerance could chuckle over emigrating Irishman as it does, if the tariff law of 1842 were yet is force? Not exactly, so far from it, that were that law, or one like it, the settled policy of this country, the Times and the British government would stand aghast at the depopulation of Ireland.
