'In fact, the advantage of Gen. Pierce's name to the Democrats, and the disadvantage of Gen. Scott's name to the Whigs, were both as generally recognized, that the latter was supposed to have lost all chance. The very last telegraphic message that arrived before the Convention had terminated its labers led us to suppose that the nomination of Fillmore or Webster was certain. But in a Democratic Convention, as in a souclave of Cardinals, nothing is lost as long as the ballot box can be kept going. The Pope and the President of the United States are the two principal elective rulers of mankind; and, though the constituencies differ, the mechanism of parties is not dissimilar, and the result just as capatity is not dissimilar.
