PITTSBURGH GAZETTE.

THE BROKEN STICK:

OR, THE YOUNG CRIMINAL CONVICTED.

My mother was of a family of the Puritans. Over us, her little children, she held the reins of government lovingly, yet most firmly. She as really punished us in love as she kissed us in love. She went to her rod one day, and found it broken, and broken in such a way that it must have been with hands. Some one of the children, she said, has done this. We all denied. Mother grew in earnest, and said the one that did it had better own it, for she should find it out. We all denied it again, and mother turned away.

By and by, one of the children went softly up to her, and told her that I did it, and she saw me. Mother came to me alone, and laid it to my charge. I denied it, but she produced her evidence. I began to be silent. "As soon," she said, "as I get baby to sleep, I shall reckon with you." I noticed she felt deeply, and could not sing to the baby as usual, but would once in a while cast her black piercing eyes upon me.

Soon she made all ready. The moment of trial had arrived. She took me by the hand. She summoned her witnesses, and took the Bible in the other hand, and led me away to the barn. And when she had closed the barn door, she sat down, and placed me before her. She opened the Bible, and read very distinctly the words, "All liars shall have their part in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone."—Then she looked to me with anger, being grieved. She asked me again if I was guilty. I pleaded not guilty. She called up the witness. Witness testified that I did it. Witness cried, and I cried. But the court was firm. The court sent for the very stick that had been broken. And when I looked at it, and my sister told the court how I did it, all in a moment I knew I did it. But even now, my heart is gray, I can say, I really thought myself innocent, until I saw how the stick was broken.—Solomn day, solemn moment. The judge was convinced—the culprit was convicted. I told her I forgot—I forgot, but she bade me not add sin to sin.

Mother told us it was not the stick she cared for; it was the lie. I told her I was sorry, and would never do so again. "O," she said, "you are sorry now because I am going to punish you." She went on and explained the crime. She rehearsed the evidence and the aggravations attending the sin, and how God looked down on my wicked heart. She told us how one little sin would lead to a greater, and that to a greater. "And now, my son, you are come to this." I looked at her, and tears stood in her eyes. And every time I looked at her I fell a crying as if my heart would break. She still kept her finger on the passage about liars, once in a while reading it. That passage was the law, the verdict, and my warrant. And all the hope I had was that mother said she was sorry for me, and hoped that God, for Christ's sake, would forgive me.

She asked if I thought it was right that she should punish me? and I told her I thought it was. But she said she wanted time to talk with father about it; and she bound me over to receive my final trial before him; then she arose from her seat, and we all left the court-house. I knew mother pitied me, and so did all the children.

When father came in, she rehearsed the whole matter to him, and asked him what she had better do. He sat down and looked at me, and went on to tell me what a wicked thing it is to tell a lie, and how he had hoped better things of me. But he told mother that she must do with me what she thought best. If she thought it best to punish me, he should not object.

Then mother called me to her, and told me it was the first time she had ever found me in a lie. She hoped that I would ask God to forgive me, and give me grace never to do so again; and with many other such words did she persuade me to hope that there was mercy for me. I kept close to my mother. I rocked the cradle, and brought her water, and swept the room. I loved her more than ever. But never again did she have occasion to accuse me of that great sin. And never did she or any of the family allude to that trial, until I became a minister, and she was on her death-bed. I asked her if she remembered it.—She wept, and I wept again. I thanked her, and she said, "Thank God; I have never done more than my duty."

A HAPPY HOME.

The first year of married life is a most important era in the history of man and wife. Generally, as it is spent, so is almost all subsequent existence. The wife and husband then assimilate their views and their desires, or else, conjuring up their dislikes, they add fuel to their prejudices and animosities for ever afterwards.

"I have somewhere read," says the Rev. Dr. Wise, in his Bridal Greetings, "of a bridegroom who gloried in his eccentricities. He requested his bride to accompany him into the garden a day or two after the wedding. He then threw a line over the roof of their cottage. Giving his wife one end of it, he retreated to the other side and exclaimed:

"'Pull the line!'

"She pulled it at his request as far as she could. He cried—

"'Pull it over!'

"'I can't,' she replied.

"'Pull with all your might!' shouted the whimsical husband.

"But in vain were all the efforts of the bride to pull over the line, so long as the husband held on the opposite end. But when he came round, and they both pulled at one end, it came over with great ease.

"'There,' said he, as the line fell from the roof, 'you see how hard and ineffectual was our labor, when we pulled in opposition to each other; but how easy and pleasant it is when we both pull together. If we oppose each other, it will be hard work; if we act together, it will be pleasant to live. Let us, therefore, always pull together.'

"In this illustration, homely as it may be, there is sound philosophy. Husband and wife must mutually bear and concede, if they wish to make home happy. There must be a unison of action, sweetness of spirit, and great forbearance and love in both husband and wife, to secure the great end of happiness in the domestic circle."

Plato being once asked how long he meant to be a disciple, said, "As long as I am not ashamed of growing better and wiser."

From the Great West.

THE Microscope reveals what dentists have long asserted, viz: That the teeth are infected with parasitical Plants and Animals, unless frequently and thoroughly cleansed. This is shown by the Animal and Zoological collection in your mouth, bursting teeth and gums, facial breaths, swelled gums, mercurial mineral metals, and the dentists horrid array of Tools. The best preparation to cleanse the teeth and mouth, and destroy animalculiæ, as well as to cure the worst mouth in existence, is Fahnestock's Vermifuge, the only surprising, sold and warranted by the principal Druggists in the principal towns.

HOSE—Just rec'd at the "India Rubber Depot"—A fresh supply of vulcanized Rubber Hose, which surpasses leather in the following important particulars. Its strength—the pressure has been applied without bursting it. It is perfectly light—one hundred of leather can be connected and carried through a small space. It resists any amount of cold, through which leather is affected. It resists the element—it resists no odour, hose requires less care than leather. It is perfectly tight—a perfect hose at least than leather, and will not freeze in the severest cold. It will not stretch any smooth inside, hence it will throw water ten or twenty per cent further than the leather. It is twenty per cent lower in price.

RAWLE ON COVENANTS FOR TITLE.—A practical treatise on the Law of Covenants for Title. By William Rawle.
This work is devoted to the consideration of the liabilities and Rights of Vendors of Real Estate, arising from their Covenant for Title. As such covenants are, in some shape or other, introduced into almost every conveyance of real estate on both sides of the Atlantic, it is hoped the profession will not deem it unnecessary a work which has for its object their analysis and explanation. The English treatises on the law of Vendor and Purchaser, though containing chapters for Title has allotted to it comparatively little space, but there is a vast body of American authorities which have not hitherto received the classification and analysis which the importance of the subject demands.
