But as your answer is, that you have no such object, permit us to ask you how you expect to live in union with men with whom you refees to hold political fellowable? Do you not see that he rule you propose to yourselves, whatever may be your intentions with regard to the integration of the Union is table. the rule you propose to yourselves, whatever may be your intentions with regard to the integ-gity and preservation of the Union, is tanta-

Locorcoc Cincular.—We have before us a guidat the system of clavery; but we contend with equal exracutess that we are not exonctant from the duties which our wind with slaveholders impose upon us; and that any action, intended to separate us from them, is essentially revolutionary.

The great majority of those who compose the Free Boll party are exracet Christian men; and we know that they will not treat lightly the teachings of Him whose name they bern. "If pray not," said had of his disciples, "that then whoold had take them out of the world, but that thou shooldet keep them from the evil." Do our Free Boll friends thisk, in view of these remarkable words, that it is His will that they should take themselves out of the Union, or out of the world, and if these Free Soil men are Christians, the Union. needs them, the wish needs them, the demonstrate med them—not as antagonists, but as citizens, as grides, as co-workers.

His servants were grieved at seeing these viie plants growing amongst the wheat, as our fidends are grieved to see so abominable a thing as slavery mixed up with our excellent political institutions; and whether they attribute it to Satan or to Great Britain, they too may very truly exclaim, "An enemy hath done this!"—
Well, the owner of the field in question had some good and faithful servants—as our Free Soil friends are good and faithful servants—as our Free Whig party, and to direct our efforts to deliver addresses at the different meetings. It is thought that Measure diditions and current they were a little indiscreet. They proposed at once to go to work and weed out the tares; but their master forbade, saying, "Nay; lest while ye gather up the tare, ye root up also the wheat with them." These words, it seems to us, have a striking application to the case before us. Visiones, rathness, extreme measures, are not in accordance with the precepts or the spirit of Him who came to "bind up the broken hearted, and preach deliverance to the captives." Think you ho would be pleased to see you laying waste the beautiful to fall extra part of the falls, we may leave more severe measures to that the work.

But two ways remain open for its abolition—one by the voluntary action of the States in which it exists; the other by resolution. We know that there is at present little bope of the first; but are we prepared to adopt the second?

We may, nay, if you plesse, we are bound to, bear our testimony with all possible earnestness against the system of elavery; but we contend with equal earnestness that we are not exonerated from the duties which ery union with all-rossible the Whig party for this cause, would elaveholders impossible the sum of the content of the content of the character of the whole: as the dutien of the character of the whole: as the content of elavery, by that clause of the Constitution which enjoins the delivery of tagitives, the particular of the character of the whole: as the content of the character of the whole: as the content of the character of the whole: as the particular of the character of the whole: as the content of the character of the whole: as the content of the character of the whole: as the content of the character of the whole: as the content of the character of the whole: as the content of the character of the whole: as the content of the character of the whole: as the content of the character of the whole: as the content of the character of the whole: as the content of the character of the whole: as the content of the character of the whole: as the content of the character of the whole: as the content of the character of the whole: as the content of the character of the whole: as the content of the character of the whole: as the content of the character of the whole: as the content of the character of the character of the content of the character of the whole: as the character of the character of the whole: as the character of the character of the whole: as the character of the character of the character of the whole: as the character of the cha

But the leaders of that party will insected to the state party will message for the subalterns of the party is one they part of the subalterns of the party is one thing, but a warm, generous enthusiagm on the part of the great body of the votors is a very different thing; and without this an election campaign is heavy, up-hill work. In the life, character, or services of Gen. Pierce there is and bailing the efforts of the men who are as bord at the street its progress andresist its claims.

Weakened by their descriton, the friends of freedom in the North have been forced to give way somewhat. In 1844 the action of fifteen thouseand "Liberty men" in New York gave the vote of that State to Mr. Polk, which secured his election, and thus sentialed upon the country the calamitous measures of the runexation of Tens, the war with Mexico, with all its disturbing sequences, out of which arose that bitter and dangerous strife which ended in the enactment of the compromise measures. To them the country is indebted for the fightive laws in the same for the abandoment of the Wi'mot Proviso.

Well may the defenders of slavery look with complisheems of Savery, and the Conventions of Buffulo and Pittsburgh, while they aim their heaviest blaws at such men as Saward, Johnston and Greely.
