AFTERBOON BESSION. The Convention was opened with prayer l the Rec. Dr. Pressly.

A number of Clergymen who were called upon declined speaking.

The Rev. D. R. KERR confessed that the basis ow hefere them, was not perfectly satisfactor; to him. The testimony had not been prepared according to what he conceived to be the socording to what he conceived to be the true theory, but they were not there to day to theorize, but to accept or reject the basis of union. They had assembled for the purpose of having a mutual interchange of opinion, and in order to improve the basis, if possible. There was no difficulty connected with it, which was insurupunatable. He thought that the first part that the should be depend and as much of was no difficulty connected with it, which was insurmountable. He thought that the first part of the hasis chould be dropped, and as much of it as it was thought necessary to retain, should be pluced in the instrative after the union had been consummated. The hinth article on pages 20, 21 and 22 of the hasis should likewise be omitted, and the foot note, with the exception of the last sentence, substituted. He did not suggest this omission because the article was decidedly heterodox, but because the thought that it would be more satisfactory to them. He would agree, however, to the basis for the sake than between brethren in the same congregation byterian Church, had already explained the reasons of his being there, and also of his not desiring to take a prominent part in their deliberations. These reasons had not originated in any feeling of dislike to the union morement, or an averainn to its consummation between the brethren of the various churches. If he stated these ons, however, they might be a barrier in the would be serry to say or do anything that would would be sorry to say or do anything that would in the slightest degree, mar the harmony of their proceedings. He had a word to say, however, regarding his own personal consistency, and was sorry that he was compelled, from the statement of Mr. Douglass, to refer to it. He stated tha I had pledged myself to bring the basis before our Syned, and that I did not do-so. The burden of this inconsistency, however, if consisten-

Mr. E. went on to state why he had constitute yet was searcely an article in the principles of both chardness were has principles of both chardness were the same. The demonstration was a locar, and he thought that they graph to be organically one. He saws or reason why they should not adopt the basis of union. Noy, he would go further and say that if the Associate Reformed Church did not adopt the basis of union. Noy, he would go further and say that if the Associate Reformed Church did not adopt the basis of union. Noy, he would go further and say that if the Associate Reformed Church did not adopt to wand compare the basis with their Acts and written minutes, it would be found that they agree perfectly. At the same time there was searcely an article in it to which he could not take exception, but it was not would not take exception, but it was not would not take exception, be the was sould not take exceptions, but it was not would not take excep mot take exception, but it was not worth their white now to contend about trifles, for similar objections would be to the Confession of Faith itself. He wished, for instance, the texts of Scripture to be incorporated in the text, and the riews of the Church on them placed in foot notes. He had no dificulty in almost the compling the basis, with brother Kerr's amendments, namely that the first article should be dropped, and the note or page 22, with the exception of the last sentence, substituted for the sinth article. He presumed that in case of adoption, the basis would be revised.

On page 12, Section third of article second, part second, page 12, Section third of article second, part second, part second, be found, the following:

The Rev. Mr. Navis, of the Reformed Prestertained different views, it was proposed that we skould have a fall interchange of views, and I read from a copy of that work, which Doctor Rodgers has quoted here to day (the Acts of the Associate Reformed Church). When a question was propounded to me, I read from it, without was propounced to me, I read from it, without adding any words of my own, and the fathers in our sister church said that they were very much surprised and gratified, for that they were pre-cisely the views entertained by them. Formerly there unhappily appeared to be a disposition in these churches to stand aloof from each other, and I do not wonder that the fire of Christain love, grew cold, if it was not extin-guished. Such a course is like separating the burning matter on the hearth, the heat and flames diminish, but our present course brings it together again, and the flames combined inorease. We have met, prayed and interchanged oy it was, did not fall exclusively on him, Mr. opinions, and come to the conclusion that we only on the conclusion that we entertain the same views. The subject of union had, however, not been entirely overlooked, Dr. Guthris had brought the matter incidentally before the court, and there time is, is it as good a hasis as we could expect,
